edssingle. 1

F you wish to see the Queen's of to-day, circumspice; the Queen's of yesterday is here pictured. Perhaps the change is more in semblance than in reality, for the spirit which is Queen's is the spirit which was Queen's at the beginning, and will be Queen's to the end, we trust. The spirit may be expressed in the words, "Truth is its own light and its own support," or in the words of the college motto, "Stedfastness comes from knowledge blended with wisdom." Whatever sparks of pride in their Alma Mater that may have been at times detected in the graduate of Queen's are due to their satisfaction in seeing fulfilled the early visions of the Old Guard. (See Endowment Number, "Queen's of To-day.")

You need hardly be reminded that in Kingston your feet are on historic soil. The names of its adjacent islands recall many a page of exploration, trial and adventure, and its forts and towers are worthy of a passing glance.

As you look out over the harbour you see part of the twenty-mile-wide source of the St. Lawrence and the lake sentinels of the 1000 Islands. Downwards through these islands, upwards along the Bay of Quinte, and northwards through the Rideau Lakes are trips c. anusual beauty. These and other points of interest are montioned at the end of this booklet.

In the name of the University, the Kingston Presbytery and the people of Kingston, we welcome the Assembly to the Grant Memorial Hall, trusting that all its deliberations may be to the glory of God and to the enduring profit of that branch of the Church which it represents, and hoping that every Commissioner may carry away with him pleasant recollections of the old Limestone City and its seat of learning.

1