to love and pray, to love and practice the holy virtue of purity, to preserve their souls; clean, innocent and acceptable in the sight of God. No one can tell how many thousands owe to him and the Angelic Warfare their salvation from the corruption of six and the flash. God alone knows how many thousands rose from the mire and filth of incontinency and became shining of incontinuity and samples of grace, of spiritual beauty and sanctity through His intercession and devotion to the Angelic Warfare."

THE KEEPING OF SUNDAY.

When the Master of the House is called Beelzebub, they of the house-hold need not crave a better name; and if the Lord of Universe was accused of breaking the Sabbath by walking in the fields, His bride must be willing to be taunted for being found at His side. In the eyes of the found at His side. In the eyes of the Dissenter, Catholics, as a body, fail to keep holy the Sabbath day. What he means by the Sabbath, and on what he bases his keeping of it, he is not quite clear. Not till the time of Moses did the observance of the day begin; though in Genesis we are told that "God blessed the seventh day and hallowed it." To a people of shepherds a a non working day was not neither necessary or possible. With a settled agricultural life, the privilege of a day of rest for man and beast is asserted in the Book of Douteronomy. serted in the Book of Dauteronomy. The Hebrew is there told to keep the seventh day as a day of rest, not be-cause the Creator rested on it, but in order that "thy man slave and thy maid slave may rest even as thou." The Decalogue exalted the beneficient regulation into a binding law. The Dissenter does not, however, pausc to reflect that the commandment applies to the Saturday instead of the Sunday, and that he has no authority but that of the Catholic Church for the transfer. "The Son of Man is Lord also of the Sabbath," and His Church inherited the domination. Oar Lord, besides exposing Himself to the criticism of the Scribes, declared the Sab-bath is "made for man, not man for the Sabbath," and remarked the inconsistency of those who loosed an ox or an ass on the Sabbath, yet were shocked when He on the same day 'loosed a daughter of Abraham whom Satan had bound." But he did not abrogate the Sabbath. This was the work of the Church. "Let no man judge you," Says St. Paul, "in the matter of a Sabbath Day." In commemoration of Christ's resurrection, and to distinguish it forever from the Sabbath of the Old Law, the first and not the seventh day was chosen by the Apostles as a day of special devotion to God. It is called in the Apocalypse "the Lord's Day;" and in the Acts we are told how the disciples came together on the first day of the week to break bread.—American

THE CHARM OF BELGIUM'S CHURCHES.

Writing from Brussels, "Carisbel," a gifted correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, says: "The churches are heavy and dark, with massive Norman towers, at which one cannot look long without a sickening sense of helpless ness, perhaps occasioned by their immensity and our own insignificance.

But within the churches of Belgium have one superlative charm, —thrilled me with a strange joy. It in spite of the fact that they are not seemed to me that there I could wait for decorated with frescoes, which orna-ment and give color to the churches of Italy, for it would have been impossi-ble to preserve frescoes in such a climate. The pictures are votive offerings and are placed in chapels erected by their donors or placed on a high altar, the gift of a league or an emperor to commemorate a miraculous interposition in favor of the Fiemish or in honor of a favorite saint. And to one accustomed to the warmth and color of the churches of the South

there is a sense of missing.
"But a certain absence of sensuous. ness is forgiven in the realization of the highest religious feelings and atmosphere of solemn and penetrating "Father, this is my first confession; mosphere of solemn and penetrating devotion. From 6 in the morning till after 12 a succession of worship pers attends the Masses, and during that time apsolute silence and order are kept. No pictures are shown, no tombs may be visited; there are about me, as if he would henceforth vergers in uniform present to exact the keeping of the rule. With all the impatience of a sightseer one is apt to fret against the delay this regulation imposes, tut let one step out of the clear sunshine into the tempered gloom of the Cathedral, look through the vista of arches to the nave where the altar is aglow with lights and the choir in white vestments are on their knees, and for the aesthetic effect alone one is willing to wait. It was for this the church was built, that sculptors adorned it, artists painted it, and only in your role of spectator have you no part in it. They to whom it belongs are the old women in the black cloaks and creped cars kneeling against the pillar; the little bare and prostrated myself before the altar footed girl with her wooden shoes in her hand; the lay Sister in her wonderful blue woollen dress and starched linen bonnet; to the seamed and seared old man with the medals on his breast and the coat, like Joseph's, of many colors. We will not see its like again from the same hand till we look at the Pieta in St. Peter's which he carved when beauty, not muscular power, claimed him as her votary.

A CONVERT'S FIRST CONFES-SION.

Mr. Charles Warren Stoddard, the brilliant writer, relates in his book, "A Troubled Heart," how he made his confession after he became a Catholic.

He says:
"Did any one ever approach the mysterious portal of the confessional for the first time without a feeling of awe? My turn came at last. It was on a night when many penitents were gathered in the dimly lighted chapel. For a time I held aloof, not knowing exactly what to do, or how to do it. Of course the formula and the instruc tions were in my prayer book-I had long since purchased a prayer book— but I felt awkward and half afraid; and so I knelt apart from the others, and patiently awaited my turn.

"People came and went. Probably the majority of them knew what priest was in each confessional; but I knew not, nor did it matter at all to me What worried me now was how to get safely in there, how to get through my confession with as little confusion as possible, and then how to get safely out again. I saw that I must kneel in the train of those who were to be confessed, one after the other, and follow them as they drew nearer and neares to the curtain that hung before the little closets of the confessional; and, so, finally, there could be nothing for me to do but to enter as the last one made his exit. I did this, with my heart climbing up in my throat, as I got closer and closer to the closeted priest. I was intent upon my prayers, and upon the formula with which I had striven to make myself familiar, and was almost unconsciously getting on and on towards the hidden one. All at once some one who was next be-fore me arose and disappeared. I looked after him, he had secreted himself behind the swaying curtain. There was a pause, a very long pause it seemed to me, and then I heard a rust ling and a chatter as of a sliding shutter. A penitent emerged from the farther side of the confessional, and

" By this time I heard unintelligible whispering near me, or a deep sigh now and again, and soothing sibilants that flowed continually, until the in-visible shutter was slid back again. Almost immediately my side of the confessional was vacated. I arose and entered, kneeling fearfully in that small chamber—no doubt one of the smallest chambers in all the world. A heavy green curtain shut in the darkness; I saw only that there was a crucifix upon one hand, and a little square lat-tice with a gauze screen behind it, directly in front of me; and that this lattice was closed by a solid inner shutter, I heard faintly the whisper of the confessor, who was beyond the screen; and I waited now full of contentment and security—as if I were literally out

hours without impatience; but I heard

It was a sudden though not unexpected climax, and I was thrown off my guard. I began in great embarrassment the con-tession which I had made to myself over and over again, and in less than half a moment found myself hopelessly involved. There was but one thing to be done then, and I did it with all

"From that moment I felt as if I held God's ambassador by the handand how I clung to him! I felt as if he had thrown his protecting arm search my heart and find if in some dark corner of it there were not still the shadow of a lurking sin and that I might then root it out and bring it to him in absolute contrition. I wanted him not to dismiss me yet, but to reprove me again as gently and as gravely as at first, and to offer me once more that consolation he had al-ready so freely given. Then came the absolution, like a fountain of healing and refreshment; and I was bid-

ANOTHER DANGEROUS STIMU-LANT.

President Gilman of Johns Hopkins University asserted the other day that people nowadays read too much. He

"Reading is a kind of craze that has got hold of the people. It is a dangerous habit, like a stimulant. The publishers are constantly putting forth new attractions in the field, and the reviewers excite our appetites. It is no doubt very pleasant to be up to date, well posted and in the swim about the latest issues from the press, but we are all in great danger of reading too much."

This is very true. From the small boy who goes crazy from devouring Jesse James stories to the devotees of Zola and Ibsen, there is a general mental and spiritual debauch on reading. Some unfortunates — for they can be called nothing else-have so far succumbed to the reading habit that they aim to skim through, at least everything that the publishers publish everything that the publishers publish and reviewers exploit. Read slowly. Read surely. Read well. Read helpful, healthful and uplifting books. A book is not necessarily good because it is new, or because it is advertised widely. A friend of ours the other day, whose business it is to read nearly all the new books, complained of being uttarly tired of it and plained of being utterly tired of it, and asserted, whimsically, that the parts of the new verb "to write," were "write" "wrote," "rot." And "rot" though not an elegant word, is em inently fitted to express the first thought that arises on perusing some novels. Milton thought it was of the greatest concernment to the state "to have a vigilant eve how books demean hemselves as well as men : and thereafter to confine, imprison and do sharpest justice upon them as malefactors;" but he says, "A good book is the precious life blood of a master spirit, embalmed, treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life." It behooves us, then, to read good books. At present we seem to have gone crazy on promiscuous reading. We never question whether a book is worth while or not. We are so busy reading we have not time to think.—Sacred Heart Re-

A Black Orator. From the Ave Maria.

We quite agree with the "Bookthat the following sentences from an exhortation delivered by a Negro preacher at a revival in Atlanta show a very high degree of "un tutored native elequence and of primitive imagination which rises to the

This is, as our clever contemporary says, absolutely apocalyptic; the language is forcible and the imagery Miltonic. But the suggestion that it may, after all, be the work of some white man is wholly unnecessary and extremely improbable. One of the most highly colored and imaginative discourses we have ever read was written and spoken by a black orator.

IN THE PRESENCE OF GOD.

From a Sermon by Father Coupe, S. J. The best way, perhaps, to practice yourself in the conscious presence of God is by the method of ejaculatory prayer, and it is well to select indul-genced prayers. You are tempted, let us say, to sin : you reflect for an in stant that God's eye is upon you - that is the act of faith—and then you make the act of will: "Incline unto mine aid, O God: O Lord make haste to help me." Or you are wearied with work, and you pause a moment to think of God and to say, "As the hunted stag in others, thou wilt often meet with panteth after the fountains of living loss. water, so doth my soul long for Thee, O God." Or you are gazing upon the sky, sown with stars at night, and you reflect how that God with finger tip is marshalling these mighty spheres as they wheel in their vast orbits through the heavens, and you say, "The heavens and the earth are full of Thy glory, O Lord." Some love to lock on able to do him. flowers and to think of the beauty of God which flowers faintly shadow forth. Others love to gaze upon the restless sea, with its resistless ebb and flow, and to ponder the awful power of God, of which the sea is so speaking a type. Indeed, all nature is a book that tells of God's presence, and at every page we can admire the power, the beauty, the grandeur, the providence, the loving kindness of our un-speakable Gcd. But, most precious custom of all, bethink yourself often during the day of the Sacred Heart of Jesus petitioning for your love. Jesus stands like a suppliant at the door of your heart and knocks for admittance. Do not repulse Him. Do not overlook Him. And there is no need to receive Him with ceremony; no need for fine speeches or well-turned phrases. When speeches or well-turned phrases. When you hear the clock strike, sign yourself and say, "O Sacred Heart of Jesus I implore that I may love Thee daily more and more." Or, if that be too long, say simply, "My Jesus, mercy," or "Thy Kingdom come." Nay, you need use no words at all. Think but of God's presence and make a momentary, inarticulate act of love of Himstery, in actions and himstery in actions are not considered in the love of himstery, in actions and himstery in actions and himstery in actions are not considered in the love of love of himstery in actions and himstery in actions are not considered in the love of love of himstery in actions and himstery in actions are not considered in the love of love of love of himstery in actions are not considered in the love of love of himstery in the love of himstery
