Lady Marjorie's Love

"I?" Her eyes were down and she did not see his smile. "Oh, I matter less than anybody! I am glad you came down this morning—it was the best thing you could do. Did you manage to sleep at all? I'm afraid not—you look quite exhausted still."

"No I tried, but I could not, I—I was so afraid of this morning," she shivered.
"Poor child. There was no need, fortunately. You must try to sleep by-and-by. You know there is nothing to fear now."
"Yes I will," she faltered, glancing at him and glancing away. "I have not thanked you, Mr. Barrington."

"Don't cry again, Norah!" she said coaxingly. "I want us all to have such a jolly time presently—just not be there."

All the bewilderment, misery, fright, and humiliation of yesterday seemed to sweep over her again as she said the words, overwhelming her. She would have clasped her hands over her face and broken into passionate sobbing but for the firm hold which he still kept upon the one she had given him. He took the best way of helping her to control herself when he glanced in the direction of the library-door.

"Hush, hush!" he said at once soothingly and warningly. "Don't forget that they may come out, and they must not see you cry. That will never do—it will undo all that we tried to do last night. You are not fit to talk about it now, and since it is over, why need you talk about it? Let us change the subject, shall we? Or perhaps you are too tired to stay here—you have not slept and must be worn out."

"No, no!" She resolutely bit her lips, suppressed the on-coming sobs, and composed herself. "I want to say something else." She tried to look at him and failed. "You remember that last night I said—that if I explained—you would understand better? I mean why I went to London?"
"I remember."
"He still held her hand. He had taken it as cold as ice; it was all fluttering and glowing now. She pulled it away and clasped both together in her lap. She spoke almost in a whisper her head hanging down over them."

"I want to explain how it was. I should never have run away to London, to my cousin, but for something you don't know. I should never even have thought of it—of course I should not—but for one thing. I have—I mean I had been engaged to him for a long time."
"I knew that," said Barrington quietly.

"You did?" Struck with amazement she looked up at him wide-eyed. "You did? Oh, then had she been engaged to her hair. Had she completed the sentence it would have been, 'Then how dared you propose to me?' She bit her tongue in her eagerness to keep the words back. Only yesterday she had said to him, 'How dare you?' and the issue of the question could not be called triumphant, for him, it is only doing justice to his penetration to say that he understood what she would have said fully as well as she herself did. But he hid it with admirable readiness and tact."

CHAPTER XXXII. ADD LAST.
It was late the following afternoon when Norah—now recognized as the Honourable Mrs. Loftus Blight—arrived at Castle Marling. The day was warm—more like June than October—and the sash of Lady Marjorie's favourite window in the hall was thrown up to admit the air. She half knelt and half sat on a cushion at Norah's feet as the latter sat on the window-seat. The rays of the sun, streaming in, were making a glowing coronal of her chestnut-gold hair, and Marjorie, looking up into her face as she knelt, was struck by its beauty. But there were traces of tears upon it, for the gray eyes were wet and the lips were tremulous. Marjorie bent her head suddenly and caressingly kissed the white hand she held. She had never been in the least in love with Loftus—the mere idea was unutterably absurd—but she was willing to confess that she had fallen head over ears in love with Loftus's wife.

"Don't cry again, Norah!" she said coaxingly. "I want us all to have such a jolly time presently—just not be there."

All the bewilderment, misery, fright, and humiliation of yesterday seemed to sweep over her again as she said the words, overwhelming her. She would have clasped her hands over her face and broken into passionate sobbing but for the firm hold which he still kept upon the one she had given him. MRS. STEVENS RECOVERS

After Years of Suffering. Tells How Her Health Was Regained.

Waurika, Okla.—"I had female troubles for seven years, was all run down, and so nervous I could not do anything. The doctors treated me for different things but did me no good. I got so bad that I could not sleep day or night. While in this condition I read of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and began its use and wrote to you for special advice. In a short time I had regained my health and am now strong and well."

Mrs. Sarah Stevens, R.F.D., No. 2, Comanche, Okla.

Another Woman Recovers.

Newton, N.H.—"For five years I suffered from female weakness and dragging down pains. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has restored my health and the pains are gone."

Mrs. F. A. Peaslee, R.F.D., Box 88.

Because your case is a difficult one, doctors having done you no good, do not continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has remedied many cases of female ill, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, and it may be exactly what you need.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Algonquin Park is just the out-of-the-way kind of place that offers rest to the tired business man and recuperation to any one run down.

The Park is 2,000 feet above sea level and the air is rarified, pure and bracing.

IS YOUR CHEST "WHEEZY?"

Tightness and wheezing means your trouble is deep-seated. To delay is dangerous. Inflammation must be drawn out at once. Rub the throat and chest with Nerviline, and put on a Nerviline Porous Plaster. Relief comes in an hour. The counter-irritant effect of the plaster relieves the tightness and strain, draws out the soreness, eases the pain. The penetrating qualities of Nerviline enable it to soak to the very core of the trouble, and you experience a feeling of warmth and relief that proves the danger is past. For weak chest, sore throat and tendency to colds, the Nerviline Treatment beats all others, try it.
