

TUCKER TOOK THE TWO TUMBLES.

Simpson Was to Him as Clay Is to the Sculptor.

A Small Audience Was Present and the Contest Did Not Afford a Great Deal of Satisfaction to the Sports.

The wrestling match between Ed Tucker and Billy Simpson, with which the new Opera House arena was formally opened on Saturday night, did not afford the best satisfaction...

The men stepped upon the mat amidst a cordial greeting from the sports. Tucker was backed by Bob Olliver, and Simpson by Fred Atkinson.

Upon time being called the two gladiators sprang to the center of the mat and began to reach for holds. Simpson suddenly caught Tucker on the back of the head and flopped him to the floor.

After a rest of 15 minutes the men again went at it. Simpson again threw Tucker to his belly, and then struggled vainly to turn him over.

Simpson gives his weight at 155 pounds, and Tucker at 160.

At the conclusion of the match Billy Murphy arose and issued a challenge to the victor and also to the winner of the forthcoming match between Treneman and Marsh.

Domville Rides to Her Doom.

The gallant steamer Domville, the property of popular Ed Barrington, will never see Dawson again. Her shattered frame lies on the rocks of the treacherous Thirty-Mile, where she met her doom on Friday last.

From the moment the boat entered the swift current a battle was on. The low water showed rocks on every hand, and the boat was alternately stepped one way and another to escape them.
