COLLIN'S TRIAL STRONG EVIDENCE

Rev. Father McAulay Identifies Many Articles in Collins' Valise as Stolen from Him—Examination Adjourned for Week.

Hopewell Cape, Sept. 28.—The preliminary examination of Thomas P. Collins charged with the murder of Mary Ann MacAulay, was not concluded today as was expected on account of the absence of two witnesses. The most important evidence today was given by Detective Killen and Father MacAulay, the priest at whose house the murder occurred. Detective Killen told an interesting story of the search for and subsequent capture of Collins near St. George, and the detailed statement made to him by Collins which was taken down in writing. Killen also told the story of the search for the valise and the articles found in it at the home of the prisoner. A number of witnesses whose testimony was largely of corroborative character were examined by Mr. Tweedie, and the climax to the chain of evidence woven by the prosecution came when Father MacAulay, called as the last witness, the day and identified nearly all the articles found in Collins' valise left at the Dean's as belonging to him or Miss MacAulay and as having been stolen.

It is possible the prisoner showed more concern during the priest's testimony, and sat in a slumped position beside his counsel, closely following Father MacAulay's story of meeting the prisoner in Elgin subsequent to the discovery of the crime, and a detailed description of the state of the home and premises were in. Father MacAulay was on the stand more than an hour. The counsel for the accused declined to cross-examine Father MacAulay. At the conclusion of Father MacAulay's evidence the hearing was adjourned for a week to secure two witnesses.

Father MacAulay, to the effect that he hired Collins and Albert and took him to his home August 13. Collins was attending the horse, splitting wood and doing other chores. The Thursday following he left him on the lake fishing. He stayed all day, and when he returned in the evening with A. J. Gross, of St. John, he spoke to him about the hiring of the prisoner. Mr. Gross explained Collins was cutting some bushes at the lake and the priest replied that was all right. Friday afternoon Father MacAulay left for Albert on route to Fredericton road to build services Sunday, leaving his housekeeper and second cousin, Mary Ann MacAulay, and Collins was alone and he had heard of no trouble between them. The housekeeper got $2 before he left to buy groceries in Albert on the following day. Father MacAulay was in Elgin Monday afternoon on his way home. While going to attend a sick call he saw Collins on the veranda of the Grand Hotel. He arrested him and asked him how he came there. Collins said he walked there and had left because the housekeeper found fault with his fishing and had caught nothing. Father MacAulay asked Collins if he would go back and he said yes. They went to a house near by and the priest made arrangements for Collins to stay all night, and also arranged with a man to give him a drive to New Ireland.

He learned that Collins had been seen going to the station with a grip. Tuesday afternoon he went home being driven the latter part of the journey by James Doyle. On his arrival he immediately noticed an unusual state of things, certain blinds being up and others down; he also found the house open, went into the back and about the premises, and he sent Doyle to the nearest neighbors to look for her without success. Miss Kate Dook was brought over to investigate supper and while Doyle was after wood in the woodshed he discovered the body.

The priest described the condition of the body and told of other discoveries about the house, the rooms being ransacked and his closet door being broken, apparently with an axe. He missed clothing and other articles, and identified the things found in the valise left by Collins at Dean's, as having been stolen from him. It was a dramatic moment as Chief Clark lifted from the valise articles after article, and the priest positively identified them as his.

The large number of spectators present took a deep interest in the damning evidence being produced by the crown, but Collins did not appear to realize the full import of it. When the priest prepared a plea of his home, the prisoner laughed and joked with Detective Killen and others within reach and seemed to enjoy being the centre of so much attention. Father MacAulay identified some stuff in the grip as the property of Miss MacAulay. The silk handkerchief, purchased by Father MacAulay at the Halifax exposition and containing deceased's name had been a present from the priest.

Miss MacAulay's gold watch was missing and also finger rings. Her trunks were found open, but he could not say what was taken. Father MacAulay described finding a pair of his old unused overalls blood stained, as if some instrument had been wiped on them. He said a search had been made for his axe but never been found, notwithstanding Collins had told him it was in the wood pile.

Father MacAulay closed his interesting evidence by stating he had changed his place of residence on account of the tragedy.

CONNECTICUT IN COMMISSION.

New York, Sept. 29.—At the Brooklyn navy yard the battleship Connecticut was put in commission today with the customary ceremonies, including the muster of the crew on deck while the Stars and Stripes were raised aloft and the band played the national anthem. More than ordinary interest was displayed in the event by naval men owing to the fact that the Connecticut is the only battleship of the modern navy to be built by the government itself. She is of 16,000 tons displacement and is designed to have a speed of sixteen knots an hour.
