from his committee rooms to the City Hall, taken upstairs and placed in the Mayor's chair. Caretaker Horton was not aware of his coming, and the Council chamber was in darkness, but the lights were soon turned on, and, after thanking the cheering crowd, Mr. Teetzel went down to the James street steps of the hall and addressed a crowd of electors.

On account of the large number of candidates in some of the wards and the fact that there were mayoralty, aldermanic and school trustee elections in two of the wards, the returns were slow in coming in. No. 1 Ward had only the mayoralty vote, and its figures were soon ready. Mr.

Tilden lives in the ward, and his supporters had counted on a majority of 80 to 100. When it was found that he got a majority of only 40 there were ominous headshakings around his rooms. "If we carry No. 7 by 300 and hold No. 3 down to 100 majority for Teetzel, we'll win," argued the Tildenses, but No. 7 gave them the worst sort of a set back. They captured the ward by less than 100, while No. 3 rolled up almost 200 majority for Mr. Teetzel. The surprise from citizens whom he had represented all the years he was in the Council. But No. 4 Ward carried off the banner for big majority. No. 3 and 5 did well, but No. 4 gave the Mayor-elect his greatest majority—318.

MR. TEETZEL'S ADDRESS.
The Mayor Elect Makes His First Speech as Such.
About 7.15 Mr. Teetzel made his appearance on the steps of the City Hall, and was greeted with hearty cheers. He spoke for a few minutes, thanking the electors for the high honor conferred upon him by placing him in the Mayor's chair by such a handsome majority, and more especially thanking those to whom he had voluntarily turned out and worked in his behalf. He owed his election, he said, to the workingmen generally, to Independent Conservatives, those who refused to fall into line when the Spectator wielded the lash over their shoulders, and to the business men of Hamilton. The victory of the day he rejoiced in not so much because he had never had such a mayoralty election. Mr. John H. Tilden, the defeated candidate, had an army of workers all over the city. He had rigs in abundance in every polling division, and every possible facility for getting out the vote. Mr. J. V. Teetzel, who defeated him by a majority of over 700, had barely enough rigs at his disposal to take to the polls the lady voters and such men as had reported that they would not be able to go to their polling booths unless driven.

It was a quiet election, too, the vote coming out steadily all day long. About two-thirds of the total vote was polled. The large number of voters taken to the polls in Tilden rigs made some of the supporters of Mr. Teetzel quite doubtful as to the result, but the final summing up showed how the votes went. Unlike some elections, too, there was not a great glorification after the day's work. Mr. Teetzel was carried shoulder high by a crowd of enthusiasts dispersed as soon as the newspaper extras were out. Dr. Laing did not canvassing, and, being a resident less than a year, made a good run. A stylish looking team attached to a nice rig was busy all day in the Tilden interest. When the poll closed the driver remarked, "Well, we done considerable hustling, but only carried two voters to the polls. This rig was reserved for ladies, but in nearly every house we called at the ladies were either out or declined to vote," and as he whipped his team, "oh his money makes these mares go, not our love of the job of getting in voters."

Joe Board worked like a Trojan in Ward No. 4, and as a result headed the poll. Geo. Kerr did little or no work and was a good second in the hearts of the electors.

Senator Sanford's extensive real estate interests gave him a vote in every ward, and he did not overlook his franchise in any.

The poll book broadly advertised as situated at No. 361 Cannon street east, had its entrance on Oak avenue, the owner having no desire to close the barber shop at the Cannon street entrance.

The basic principle of advertising is not, as is usually understood, the item of circulation. Character enters into the matter quite as much and perhaps more. The "penny dreadfuls," with their enormous circulations, are read in a hurry and thrown away in a hurry. Of what good is their half million circulation as compared with the hundred thousand of a newspaper or magazine that is taken to the home for the entertainment, instruction and enlightenment of the family? It may be set down as a basic principle in advertising that circulation without character amounts to nothing; that character without circulation is a little better, and that circulation and character together are best.—Leslie's Weekly.

The vote on a by-law to raise by debentures the sum of $5,000 for the extension of the electric light system was defeated at Thorold.

The Sergeants returned the visit of the officers, and the merry-making was continued in the latter's quarters. Yesterday morning the officers called upon Hon. Colonels Gibson and Moore and Col. McLaren, to wish them each a happy new year. The usual pleasant hour was spent making the visits.

had been successful, although he was very proud of that, but because of the substantial endorsement of the principles which he had advocated and the platform he had stood upon. Now that the election was over he repeated his pledges that there would be no politics in municipal affairs, as far as he was concerned. His success with no paid canvassers, no politics, no house to house buttonholing, and without the hiring of an army of workers on election day he believed would be an object lesson to the people of Hamilton and to Mayorality candidates in the future. It would also be a lesson to other cities, which had been saying that Hamilton could not elect a Mayor upon the principles he had laid down. He had no fault to find with his opponent, Mr. Tilden, but was sorry that he had allowed himself to be used by a party clique in an effort to make the Mayorality contest a party fight. Mr. Teetzel closed his remarks by promising to watch carefully the city's interests, and to carry out all the promises he had made.

NOTES OF THE CONTEST.
A false report was started last night that Ald. Hill had been counted out.

Ald. Fearnside missed re-election by only eight votes.
