By RUTH CAMERON

for line. cent cent, deed for deed to somebody."-E m e r-

Why did you insist on paying Lucille for doing t hose dinner cards?" o n e woman questioned another; "it is good practice for her, and I'm sure she would be glad to do them for nothing."

"My dear," said the other woman if I pay Lucille ten cents apiece for those dinner cards, I'll be square with her, and I'll know just what they cost me. If I let her do them for no thing, I'll be under obligation to her and I shall not know how much they cost until I pay back that obligation. Let me tell you about the last time l allowed myself to be put under obligation. Last winter Mrs. Rand took care of the babies for me several times. She offered to do it, and said she loved to, but, of course, I felt under obligation to her. Well, in the spring, she told me that her piece was coming to visit her, and that she was ery anxious for her to have a good time, and I could see hoped I'd entertain for her, so, of course, I felt in honour bound to do it. Ordinarily, I would have really liked to, but the children had just had the measles, new maid; and Fred was having a fearful attack of hay fever; so, altoagain, line for gether, the party I gave for her was the worst nightmare I ever had asleep or awake. I made up my mind then and there that I'd never put myself under obligation to anyone again." Does this point of view strike you > as ungracious? The lady certainly did make some very rather sweeping statements, but I think there is a good deal in her point of view, nevertheless.

> Some of us have the habit of accenting favors with a serene sense of having gotten something for nothing. But one never gets something for nothing, even from one's friends. If you have done some favor for your friend, don't you feel at liberty to call upon him when you are in need of his particular kind of talent or ability, or anything else which he has? Well, then, don't forget that he will feel the same towards you in reversed circumstances.

I do not think it is necessary to go so far as to refuse to ever put one's self under obligation. That would be to nullify the interchange of talents and opportunities, which is one of the legitimate uses of friendship. But don't think you are getting something for nothing when you allow yourself to be put under obligation. Remember that you are really giving your note of hand to pay on demand to bearer an unknown sum in unknown currency, and be sure you are willing
