ENGLISH. ON WHOM SO MUCH DEPENDS.

London Daily Telegraph: It is a singular thing that the two professions which are worst paid should be those of the National School teachers and the clergy, and both in their respective fashions have to deal with the moulding of juvenile intelligence. It is a strange paradox that while we recognize that education is of fundamental importance to a State, and that the training of the citizens of the future is one of the most serious tasks which can be laid on the shoulders of those responsible for public instruction, we yet pay such a miserable pittance to men of whom we ask so much. Only very slowly, it would seem, is an adequate view of what education involves making its way in our community. One of the first things we have to do is to rangaize that the nation which is going to succeed in our new world is the nation which has properly organized its elementary and sec-ondary education, and which in every sep17,eod,tf
