How the Czar Was Murdered.

DRAMATIC NEW STORY — THE TRAIL OF JEWELS.

The first connected and authoritative account of the murder of the ex-Czar of Russia and his family begins in the Times to-day and will be continued daily. The following are extracts from to-day's chapter:

The true story of the martyrdom of Nicholas II., the ex-Czar of Russia, and of his wife and family is based upon evidence obtained by a properly-constituted legal investigation. The signed depositions of eye-witnesses are in the writer's possession.

At Ekaterinburg, on the night of July 16, 1918, the Imperial family and their faithful attendants—eleven persons in all—were led into a small room in the house where they had been imprisoned and shot to death with revolvers.

There had been no trial of any kind. Before their death the captives were subjected to ill-treatment, amounting to horrible torture, mental if not physical. After death the bodies were taken to the woods and completely destroyed. These acts had been premeditated and the murders elaborately prepared.

It is established beyond doubt that the ex-Czar fell a victim to his loyalty. He had refused offers from the enemies of Russia's Allies proposing that he should endorse the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk. Attempts to inveigle him into an unholy alliance undoubtedly preceded the murder. All the Romanoffs who died violent deaths were, like the Czar, inconvenient to German as well as to Internationalist plans.

At Ekaterinburg in April, 1919, I met the investigating magistrate who had been specially appointed by the Supreme Ruler (Koltchak) to conduct the inquiry into the Czar case. Nicholas Alexievich Sokolov. I was for many months in constant touch with the course of the inquiry, and personally took part in the search for the remains of the victims.

When the fall of Omsk appeared to be imminent, Sokolov departed eastward, taking with him all the documents, material clues, etc., which by right could be in no other hands save his. At Harbin Sokolov's life being in danger, he hid the dossier in my car, which had the protection of the British flag, and, with his approval I took charge of the dossier, it being understood that, given certain contingencies, I should be free at my own discretion to make it public in whole or in part. The contingency has now arisen.

In the Death Room.
Sokolov took me over the house at

Ekaterinburg where the murders took place, explaining step by step the enactment of the tragedy. We stood in the little basement room, noted the trace of the bullets, the direction of the bayonet thrusts, and the splashes of blood on the walls.

The room had been a shambles, and all the washing and scouring that, according to the evidence, had followed the murders could not remove tell-tale signs.

We knew from the depositions of witnesses and the mute, gruesome language of the death-chamber where each of the victims sat or stood when the assassins fired their revolvers. The bullet-holes in the walls and in the floor had been carefully cut out; human blood had been found in the wood and on the bullets.

Soon afterwards I was in the woods, 10 miles north of the city, where the peasants had found jewellery and other relics of the murdered family. I saw the tracks, still clear, of heavy lorries crashing through the trees to a group of disused iron-ore shafts. All went in one direction, passing near a pit round which a vast collection of clues had been discovered: precious stones, pearls, beautiful settings of gold and platinum, some hacked, broken, bearing traces of fire; metal buckles, hooks, buttons, corset-frames, pieces of charred leather and cloth, a human finger intact, a set of false teeth.

I found topaz beads, such as the young princesses wore, and other gems, by scratching the surface of the hardened clay surrounding the iron pit.

Several grand dukes and the Grand Duchess Elizabeth were murdered after the Ekaterinburg shooting, and all theories of the miraculous survival of the Romanoff children should be abandoned.—Daily Mail.
