THE WHEEL.

THE LONDON CLUB RUN.
The wind was a howling success on a small scale last night, and consequently the run arranged for the London Bicycle Club was not up to expectations. But in spite of a breeze a number of members fell in at the club house at 7.15 o'clock, and with Fred. Boltz as pilot steered their way to Pond Mills and back. On the return to headquarters the boys indulged in the various amusements provided, and whiled away a pleasant hour or two.

After a brilliant and successful tour the English cricketers are on their way home from Australia. The batting records of the team are remarkable. The captain, Mr. Stoddard, who played in eighteen innings, scored 870 runs, or an average of 51.17. The best actual average was made by A. E. Trotter, for the Australians, as he stands at 66.20, but he was only engaged in nine innings. The totals were also worthy of note. For a long while Australia's 598 at Sydney stood alone, but it was beaten by the 609 made by the Englishmen in the final match.

Final Scenes

At the Closing of the G. T. R. Shops Tuesday.

Twenty-Five Hundred Dollars Distributed Among the Men.

One Hundred and Fifty-Nine Draw Their Final Pay.

Forty-Two Go to Toronto—Twelve to Brantford—One to Windsor—Five Down Town—Names of the Transferred.

It was a strange coincidence that Sir Henry Tyler, president of the Grand Trunk, should resign his situation on the same day as 159 Grand Trunk operatives who were discharged in the East End last night. The discharging and paying off of the men was the final execution of the recent order from headquarters to reduce expenses by closing the works here. Today the erstwhile employees are scattered in every direction of the compass. The 159 before mentioned are probably at home or seeking employment. Forty-two went to Toronto, twelve to Brantford, five to the light repair shop down town, and one to Windsor. The two watchmen are left, and half a dozen store room employees bear them company. It was a queer scene that was enacted inside and outside of the car shops offices from 5 to 6 last evening. It was not yet 5 o'clock. Outside were beginning to gather a number of wagons and a crowd of children, the majority of the latter with wheelbarrows or little express carts. These were congregating to carry away the tool chests that would not be needed on the morrow. Inside the office railing sat Mr. Richard Evans, cashier at the freight house. At his feet was a small open suitcase. On the table in front of him was heaped up in denominational piles $2,500 in Canadian currency. He was busy looking over the pay roll. Just inside the yard was a gray-headed, genial-looking man, a second edition of ex-Ald. Shaw in appearance, a sphinx when questioned about Grand Trunk business, and very communicative when the weather is under discussion. This was Mr. W. Alderson, general car inspector of Toronto, who assumed charge when Superintendent Kerr left for Brantford on Monday. He was busy just then talking to Mr. Thos. Treleaven, foreman of the down town annex of the shop. Outside in the yard the sun shone brightly on the ruins of the shops destroyed by fire in 1884. They stood boldly forth, their once blackened forms bleached white by rain and shine and storm. Down the yard to the west stood several freight and passenger cars, burnished and glistening—the final output of the shops. From the eastern section of the building squads of men began to arrive and range themselves in front of the cashier and his $2,500. Time-honored freedom called out each man's name, and as he stepped forward he signed a receipt in full. This was a somewhat tedious process, and much unlike the usual one of receiving a check on the bank.

"The last call to breakfast, boys," said one man who was inclined to be funny even under the peculiar circumstances. There were many of his ilk, and many whose appearances plainly showed that the proceedings were no joke.

"I'll spit on it," said another character, as he rolled up his hand preparatory to putting it in his pocket. And he did so. To the uninitiated it might be explained that this is supposed to mean good luck.

"The last pull," was another remark. "Put it down deep in your pocket," advised one man, as he noticed a mate shoving his wages nearly down to his knee.

"Leave us a lock of your hair," asked a joker of one man who went to the front door and looked out.

"Why," said he, as he returned to get his tool box, "there are more rigs out there than there are on election day."

And one after another the men were paid off. Here was pointed out a veteran, who had been in the service 24 years—12 in Hamilton, 22 in London. He stood for a moment surveying the interior of the shops, then shouldered his box and walked out of the big gate with a firm tread. There are many who like him came with the shops from Hamilton.

One old man entered the office with a tailor's goose and a smaller iron under one arm. Under the other was a small box with a glass front and an alarm clock inside. On the top was the wooden figure of a man. As the box was set down the man fell over it. "Stand up, Sir John A. Macdonald," said the queer old man, and Sir John dutifully stood where he was propped.

By this time it was nearly 5.30, and the time-keeper opened the wickets to receive the checks. Those who had left before this gave their checks in from the inside. The check board is built for 500 employees, but in the majority of the sections appear round red chips, indicating a discharged employee. At one time the whole of the 500 were in use.

Suddenly the great steam whistle blows. It has a fog horn sound, and can easily be heard at Springbank, where the inhabitants set their clocks by it. For about a minute it holds forth with a short second of rest. Then all is still and all is over.

The tool chests went out more rapidly after this, and in less than half an hour the watchman was forcing his rounds and the cashier balancing his accounts. Chief Clerk McWood was still busy writing out passes for some of the men who will try their luck away, and Mr. Alderson looked quietly on. Soon the last box is out, the last wheelbarrow has gone, the last hand-shake given, and the big gate is closed. The Grand Trunk shops have ceased operations after 22 years of existence.

The men who go to Toronto are: Car repairers—J. Fredland, J. Pumphrey, J. Smith, W. Errington and T. Cole. Carpenters—W. Field, R. Bonny, G. Chisholm, N. Weston, J. Moran, F. Ward, R. Bissett, J. Cabinet-makers—J. White, D. Brooks. Wood machine hand—J. Meechan. Painters' assistants—George Last, J. Fair. Laborer—W. Howitt. Striker—P. Murch, J. Rockwood. Plaster—R. Gray. LINENS.

Every day something new and interesting passes into stock. We must avoid being boastful, so we will say that our Linen Department has just received the greatest addition in value we have ever had. We are proud of this season's purchases. The Table Linen stock holds an immense range of prices, and each price holds the greatest value yet shown.

At 35c, worth 50c,
At 50c, worth 75c,
At 25c, worth 35c,
At 60c, worth 80c.

A special feature is the patterns throughout the whole stock. Some of the lower grades are equal in design to lines usually sold at twice the price, and the better grades are in design entirely new. We don't know of anything more pleasing than nice patterns in beautiful Linen Towels. We are almost tempted to challenge the trade on towels, but other dealers have money as well as ourselves, and cash means closer prices; after that they want ability. We are satisfied if you would look through our stock and make some selections you would declare we have both cash for close prices, ability in procuring the proper goods and the finest patterns. We cannot give you an idea of value by quoting prices; every article in this stock is marked on a close margin, and if you don't find them big money's worth don't buy. All we ask is the pleasure of showing you Towelings and Hollands, Napkins and Doilies. New stock.

Fancy Linens.

To hand a limited stock of handsome Table Cloths, which are positive bargains; also Friction Bath Towels, Fancy Tray Cloths, Belfast Goods. Respectfully yours,

THE DUCHESS' DRESS.
London, April 30.—At the marriage of the Dowager Duchess of Marlborough to Lord William Bessford the bride wore a magnificent dress of pearl gray satin brocade, trimmed with the most costly point Argentine lace, and adorned with superb diamond buttons. The skirt, which was perfectly plain, was of a rich brocade similar to that of the waist. Her bonnet, a very small affair—was of gray velvet, richly embroidered with pearls and trimmed with ostrich plumes and a white aigrette. Instead of the usual bouquet the bride carried a prayer book.

The bride's traveling costume was of Venetian brocade on a heliotrope ground. The presents were numerous and magnificent.

THE SAN FRANCISCO HORROR.
San Francisco, Cal., April 30.—Theodore Durrant's examination on the charge of murdering Minnie Williams was resumed this morning. Dr. Barrett, the autopsy physician, testified that the murdered girl had been ordered prior to the murder, and that her death was caused by suffocation and hemorrhage. The prosecution then rested and the defense waived all testimony in its behalf. The court announced that he would render his decision in the case on Thursday next.

PRESBYTERIAN PEOPLE.

Hold a Reunion at St. James Presbyterian Church—Musical Programme and Ministerial Speeches

To mark the complete equipment of the pulpits which were vacant for so long a time, and to celebrate Presbyterianism in general, a reunion of the denomination was held in St. James' Church, Richmond street, last evening. Rev. D. Robertson, of East London, was the only member who was unable to be present, owing to sickness. It was a very happy affair. Mr. Stuart had a wedding in the first part of the evening, and Mr. Talling had to leave before the close to allow another happy couple to meet the train. Mr. Clark said that he could have had one if he had not been in attendance there. As it was, he thought one of the other ministers had the wedding that he should have had. Musical selections interspersed the various addresses. Prof. Moxon was accompanist, and opened with an instrumental solo. Soloists were rendered by Misses O'Keefe, Mutch, Carson and Mr. Skinner, and Miss Mutch and Mr. Skinner sang a duet in excellent voice and harmony. The artists were all local.

Rev. Mr. Clark was the first to address the audience. He said that the average address for an occasion like this would be to tell a few funny stories and to praise up the church and the people. He wished to deliver, as he called it, a short sermon asking them to take this question as a seed thought: "What is my chief desire?"

Rev. Robert Johnston made some humorous remarks about the name "Pepper Box" given to St. James' Church. He thought it was owing to the spicy sermons delivered there. He said that the church had not begun to work as yet. He lamented the fact that so few people were in the different Presbyterian churches, and wanted to know if it was too respectable for them. It should not be so.

Rev. J. G. Stuart, the third and final speaker, was delighted with the church and the programme, and also had a little story about the "Pepper Box" Church. He thought the Presbyterians were wrapped up in themselves—too selfish—and they should do more outside work. By what had been said during the evening he must have been rejuvenating since he came to London.

The assemblage dispersed after singing the good old hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds."

FORTY DOLLARS IN FINES.

A Busy Session at the Police Court.

Mrs. Douglas Pleads Guilty to Keeping a Disorderly House. Fined $50.—A Dog Case.

Mrs. Beattie Douglas, of Wreay street, South London, whose house was raided on Friday evening, was fined $50 or twenty days at the police court today. An inmate of the house, Lottie Payette, was allowed to go on condition that she left town in 24 hours. Mr. N. P. Graydon appeared for the defense, and at first entered a plea of not guilty, which was subsequently changed.

Robert Roberts, a respectable looking young Englishman, was charged with being drunk and disorderly. Mr. James Martin, proprietor of the Hub Restaurant, was the complainant, and stated that Roberts got drunk Tuesday morning and used most abusive language towards the girls employed in the house. Roberts denied the accusation, and added that he had been assaulted by Mr. Martin. The latter brought Ella Steinberg from the hotel, and Ella's story corroborated that of her employer. Roberts was fined $5 or ten days.

Richard Christopher, C. P. R. engineer, living at 572 Fall Mall street, owns a St. Bernard pup eight months old, and Mrs. Hamilton, a neighbor, said it was vicious. Mr. Love gave puppy an excellent reputation—playful, gentle, and a great favorite among the children of the neighborhood. It had bitten Mrs. Hamilton's boy in February last, after the youngster had jumped on his back while he was eating. Mrs. Hamilton's opinion of the dog was altogether different. It was unsafe to allow her children near the division fence, on account of the canine's vicious habits. The other day her 11-2-year-old baby would have been sampled by the dog only for her quick action in pulling the child away. Chief Williams and Mr. Love crossed swords several times during the case. Mr. Christopher agreed to keep the dog on a chain, and the magistrate enlarged the case for a week to see if the agreement is complied with. If not, the dog will be destroyed.

John McCormick's looks were against him. McCormick was charged with drunkenness and vagrancy, and was gathered in by P. C. Woolway on Richmond street. He had been trying to sell ladies' jewelry. The prisoner said he had come from Hamilton to look for work, and had been registered at the Salvation Army Hotel for a few days. The jewelry he got "from a fellow he had met, and he was merely seeing what it was worth. McCormick had not done any work since last fall, and for the next month he will get his hand in at the wood and stone piles in the fall yard.

Timothy Sullivan was remanded for a week on a charge of assaulting Mrs. Shea, of Bathurst street. The police in the meanwhile will look for two partners of Sullivan named Quinn and Moriarty.
