

Mr. Jacob Wilcox of St. Thomas, Ontario, is one of the best known men in that vicinity. He is now, he says, an old man, but Hood's Sarsaparilla has made him feel young again.

"About a year ago I had a very severe attack of the grip, which resulted in my not having a well day for several months afterwards. I was completely run down and my system was in a Terrible Condition.

I lost flesh and became depressed in spirits. Finally a friend who had been benefited by Hood's Sarsaparilla advised me to try it and I did so. I continued taking it until I used twelve bottles and today I can honestly say Hood's Sarsaparilla has restored me to my former health." JACOB WILCOX, St. Thomas, Ontario.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the Only

True Blood Purifier

Prominently in the public eye today. It cures when all other preparations fail. Hood's Pills the after-dinner pill and family cathartic. 25c.

IN SPORTING CIRCLES.

BASEBALL.

OFFERS FOR TORONTO. New York, Dec. 18.—Mr. John Chapman has received two more offers for the Toronto franchise, but declines to let it go unless his terms are agreed to. He considers Toronto one of the best cities in the country. Chapman has just closed with three first-class players for next season, including a star twirler.

THE EASTERN LEAGUE.

New York, Dec. 18.—The Eastern League completed its two days' meeting. F. T. Powers was chosen as president, secretary and treasurer. This is the fourth year that Powers has served in this capacity. Charles T. Shean, of Springfield, E. P. Smith, of Rochester, C. A. Lehmgruber, of Rochester, and John C. Chapman, of Toronto, were elected as the new board of directors.

FLYS.

Dalrymple, who for many years held down the left garden in the famous old Chicago team, is said to have recently come in for a third of his father's $300,000 estate. His family cut him off when he turned professional, but he was forgiven just before his father's death.

THE CLUB.

ONTARIO JOCKEY CLUB. The annual meeting of the shareholders of the Ontario Jockey Club was held on Tuesday afternoon at the Queen's Hotel, Hamilton. The year's accounts were passed, and last year's directorate was reappointed, with a very important exception. Mr. Wm. Hendrie, at his own desire, retired, and the position of first vice-president, and Sir Frank Smith was elected president. With these exceptions, the directors are: second vice-president, Robt. Davies, and executive committee, Messrs. Andrew Smith (chairman), Hon. John Ferguson, George Gooderham, Wm. Christie and D. W. Alexander.

GETTING ON.

Lucan High School—Written Examination—Form One.

Name.	Latin.	Grammar.	Mathematics.	Botany.	Composition.	Spelling.	Totals.
Thur Ford	88	80	85	86	73	64	476
Dixon	85	85	85	85	70	63	453
Williams	82	82	82	82	68	60	434
Margie Fraser	78	78	78	78	65	58	415
W Bowman	81	81	81	81	63	56	403
C Frothingham	75	75	75	75	60	53	393
W Cole	78	78	78	78	58	51	393
J Atkinson	74	74	74	74	56	49	381
Alex McKay	72	72	72	72	54	47	369
W Gunn	69	69	69	69	52	45	354
C Hobbs	70	70	70	70	50	43	353
A Hodgins	68	68	68	68	48	41	333
Annie McKay	65	65	65	65	46	39	325
Edna Easton	60	60	60	60	44	37	321
L Hooton	58	58	58	58	42	35	311
George Smith	55	55	55	55	40	33	303
R McDonald	52	52	52	52	38	31	275
Edna Guest	51	51	51	51	36	29	269
T Tweedie	48	48	48	48	34	27	265
E Carter	45	45	45	45	32	25	252
R Campbell	42	42	42	42	30	23	229
S Robson	40	40	40	40	28	21	219
C V Orme	38	38	38	38	26	19	211
R Gunn	35	35	35	35	24	17	201
M Lewis	32	32	32	32	22	15	193
M Sellars	28	28	28	28	20	13	177
D Orme	25	25	25	25	18	11	164
A Cunningham	22	22	22	22	16	9	151
M Armitage	20	20	20	20	14	8	142
W McRoberts	18	18	18	18	12	7	131
L Braithwaite	15	15	15	15	10	6	121
Edna Mulvey	12	12	12	12	8	5	109
Maudie Black	10	10	10	10	6	4	90
F Harleton	8	8	8	8	4	3	71
J Morkin	5	5	5	5	3	2	50
Eddie Mar	3	3	3	3	2	1	34
H Farrell	2	2	2	2	1	0	24
C Braithwaite	1	1	1	1	0	0	20
Edward MacLaughlin	0	0	0	0	0	0	133

Purer Than the Politician.

As pure as snow is the celebrated Windsor Table Salt. Take no other. Lime and magnesium in other kinds, Windsor sparkles like a gem; preserves and purifies food. Ask for it.

Froude passed seven years in collecting materials for and in writing his "History of England." He was very careful in the selection of data, and spent whole days in the effort to verify a single fact or citation.

Worms cause feverishness, moaning and restlessness during sleep. Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is pleasant, sure and effectual. If your druggist has none in stock, get him to procure it for you.

THE ONLY WAY.

To intelligently judge the future is to judge by the past. Preacher and politician, professor and scientist, all agree on that point. The only way to measure a merchant's ability and integrity is by what his customers do and what they say.

The gentleman who has never purchased clothes of me can judge by asking the opinion of a long line of patrons. He can further judge by the fact that this long line of patrons keeps coming back for more clothes.

My tailoring reputation in the past has been good. My constant endeavor is to make it better.

HARRY LENOX,

Corner Richmond & Carling Sts.

Young Liberal Concert.

As Predicted, It Was a Brilliant Success.

Wet Weather Had No Effect on the Attendance.

And the Concert Was Given to a Full House.

Mr. Ramsay and Miss Burrows, Toronto, Miss Roblin and Mrs. Robt. Reid, Jun., Messrs. Daly, McDonald, Huntington, Firth and Angus, the London Male Chorus, and the Musical Society Band.

Take Part.

The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of the occasion. Seldom has a more representative audience got together, seldom so critical a one, never a more liberal one—Liberal, probably, in a double sense—in politics, and in appreciation, and unstinted and well-deserved applause. And while much could be said of the audience, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers. The might be said of the performers, still more could be said of the performers.

As predicted, it was a brilliant success. The Young Liberal Club concert last night was, as the promoters of the affair promised it would be, the musical event of the London season. The very large attendance was satisfactory to the Young Liberals, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for the success or failure of the event, and, to judge from the responsive interest manifested by the audience, the programme in turn was satisfactory to the listeners. Only a Young Liberal concert could have filled the Opera House on such a night! Outside the rain came down in a steady stream, it was not a welcome, mild, spring shower, but a December

downpour, well calculated to dampen anything but Liberal ardor, and to chill any hope of a successful evening. But once inside—with the music and the lights, the rustle of the ladies' dresses and the hum of suppressed conversation—the rain and the cold were forgotten in the enjoyment of