Special provisions are public holidays. The third part of the der bill provides that shops shall close on Sunday. Competition in the retail business, I regret to say, has led to a constantly increasing tendency to open on Sunday, not because the shopkeepers desire it, but because somebody opens, and the rest open to keep their of closing shops on Sunday. It is necessary, of course, to make certain exceptions, which are provided in the schedule. As regards the Jewish question, the bill adopts the proposal made by the joint committee of Lords and Commons, which sat in 1906. The secretary of state may specify areas, which are largely inhabited by Jews, where it would not be an obligation to close before 2 o'clock on Sunday if the shop is closed from sunset on Friday to sunset on Saturday. street markets, where they are impor tant and customary, may be exempted by order of the secretary of state. We give powers to the local authorities to make early closing orders. The procedure of the present law is incorporated in the bill, but we make material simplifications in that procedure. Not ably we propose that the area in London should be the area of the county council-(hear, hear)-instead of the area of each metropolitan borough, which has absolutely and entirely defeated the object of the act.

Unfair Competition Dealt With. We also provide against the diffi-culty which has arisen under the existing law. Under that law unfair competition has been carried on by hawkers, cheap-jacks, and auctioneers, and otherwise, by which trade is taken from shops closed by order after the by the application of the bill to trading elsewhere and otherwise than in shops. ventilation and sanitary arrangements.
