Carney's wildness was felt by the London players. Cy. Reidy, Frank Eckstein and Handson Lusk made up the casualties. Lusk was hit on the head in the eighth and he took the count.
He was unable to go on and Harry Myers was injected into the last chapter of the pastime in his place. Reidy and Eckstein were not severely dented. Charities Helped Some.

Three bases on balls, two of which came in the fourth inning, also provided the London club with scoring opportunities. Both runners who were recipients of these gifts, later in the inning crossed the pan. In no one inning were the Reisling gents able to compile than one bingle.

Another Gift.

The only other run scored by London came in the seventh inning. More wildness on the part of Pitcher Carney was responsible for it. Lacroix was given a pass after Merritt had been suppressed on a grounder to Isaacs. Dillinger sacrificed and Lacroix took third minute later when Carney uncorked a wild pitch. Lamy's infield hit, which bounced off Carney's glove, enabled Lacroix to register. Jack Schaffer got hold of one in the eighth and poled it to deep

BRANTFORD, June 24.—Again the luck broke away from the Brants, the Saints getting away with the first of the series by the skin of their teeth with a score of 3 to 2. The rallway men got to Warner for a couple in the third, and the Brants tied the score in the fifth. Forgue got home in the eighth for a winning run. Twice, in the eighth and ninth, the locals were retired with the bases full. "Buster" Burnil was unlucky enough to see "Dad" Stewart pull in his lengthy pole when inches would have meant a homer with three camped on the bases. A final rally came to nought when Foran, the heavy hitter, went out weakly on the last chance with the basses full. Score:
