The very fact of his recall goes to emphasize the exceeding gravity of the circumstances which compelled it. Four members of the government etiring from ill-health, the leader himself being a man of advanced years and heavily overworked. Sir John, Sir Charles and Sir Hector are the "three mighty men" on the conservative side, and of these the last named is the only one in real good health. On the other side we see Mr-Blake looking far from well, and apparently as much overworked as if he were a leader in and not out of office. These are sacts which just now give unusual importance to the medical view of the political
