

these complexities the frequent shifting of residence, on the part of the tribesmen, it will be seen that great caution is necessary in attempting to identify either tribes or locations through their names alone.

20 (p. 237).—This refers to the voyage of Jogues and Raymbault to Sault Stè. Marie (vol. xi., note 16).

21 (p. 241).—This was François Fouquet, viscount de Vaux, who was born in 1587, and died Apr. 22, 1640. He was a member of the royal council, and also of parliament; and, for his integrity and ability, was held in high esteem by Louis XIII. and Richelieu, who employed him in many State affairs of importance. He was father of Nicolás Fouquet, the noted minister of finance under Louis XIV.
