

	Page.
and amend it.—Description of an Indian village.
—Formal entrance therein.—Great rejoicings on observing the scalp of a “pale face.”—The war-whoop . . . . .	98

CHAPTER VII.

Rough reception at an Indian village.—Kindness in the wife of a Chief.—Depressed condition of the females.—The author consigned to the care of an old squaw.—Did not know at first what to make of each other.—Time mended the acquaintance.—Tribes of Indians distinguished and classified.—Gradual diminution of Indian influence noticed.—Death of a noted Chief.—Affliction of his widow strongly marked.—Affects to be a prophetess.—Her family described.—View of her dwelling.—Geographical glance at the country.—Good fishing going on.—Inventory of furniture in an Indian cabin . . . . .	114
--	-----

CHAPTER VIII.

Visit to a Shawnee village.—Dress of a fine lady on going to the fair.—Dandies looked at.—The men most devoted to finery and fashion: singular proof of it.—Introduction to a village Chief.—Some doubtful heroes on the stage, among whom property is not safe.—Ill looks and ill deeds sometimes go together.—Artful questions propounded by an artful personage.—Picture of an ungodly and vain boaster.—Visits given and received.—A French baker and Polly Meadows, the soldier's wife: each respectable in his and her own way.—How to know a genuine Kentuckian.—Desperate com-
--