THE DOP DOCTOR

SOME PRESS OPINIONS

"Mr. Dehan is splendidly individual, and he has fashioned a big book with a dignity, an earnestness, far-ranging knowledge, and a high spiritual beauty which call for enthusiastic praise."—Liverpool Courier.

"Its background—a town besieged in the South African War—is excellently rendered. Mr. Dehan has noticed everything and felt everything. . . . As a picture of a siege it has scarcely any rival. . . . He is absorbing—that is the only word to use for this strange book."—Standard.

"His plot is strong, his incidents are innumerable but not too crowded, his characters for the most part live, his South Africa, and n. re especially the siege, is often magnificently done. . . . It has enough character, enough picturesqueness, enough real sentiment and humanity to carry the writer straight up to the top."—St. James's Gazette.

"He has given us with unflagging enthusiasm and often with astonishing power a huge slice of human life, chaotic, formless, sombre, complex as life is. It is impossible to do more than hint at the many poignant scenes. Mr. Dehan can grasp and handle and penetrate human passion more surely than most writers of our day. Balzac is the parallel to Mr. Dehan in scope and standpoint, in lavishness and ruthlessness. That is why criticism can best summarise 'The Dop Doctor' as a big rugged slice of life placed boldly and unremittingly before us by a man powerfully competent to the task."—Daily Mail.

"It is a warm-hearted, generous, over-lavish book. His opening scene has real beauty and pathos, and his detailed story of a great siege constitutes a really fine background."—Times.

"A great novel. The author has written a fine and moving tale, wide in its range, deep in its sympathies, full of the pain and the suffering, the courage and the truth of life."—Observer.

"What a story it is! . . . Mr. Dehan has given 'The Dop Doctor' of the most striking and the most impressive in fiction. He has, without doubt, written one of the books of the year—one that every man and woman will be reading."—T. P.'s Weekly.

"It is a very notable and even a great work. Mr. Dehan has the passion and the fire in which modern fiction is wanting. He has wide horizons. He can find room for great thoughts and ideas; he uses kindling names, and he maintains his fervour at a high pitch through all his many pages. . . . It is an achievement of which any living author might be proud."—British Weekly.

"There are many moments of intense dramatic force. I doubt if there has ever been a novel which so vividly gave the impression of a real state of war. . . . There is a great variety of characters, all of them are vividly realisable. . . . There is an energy, a fulness of spirit, a perceptiveness, a responsiveness to both lighter moods and blinding passions, a sense of great issues, which give it a quality no less significant than rare."—Daily News.

"To the real novel-reader, who likes to spend many long evenings over a story which he is ultimately sorry to have finished, we most heartily prescribe Mr. Dehan's sustaining volume. . . . At once Mr. Dehan grips us."—Pall Mall Gazette.
