> MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP AND EM-PLOYES.

Opponents of municipal ownership on this continent, while carefully refraining from open discussion of its results in those places where it has been tried and proved, occasionelly venture to make misleading suggestions with regard to the details of its operation, Thus, the other day, The Stratford Beacon read a little homily to the working classes of Canada on the scale of remuneration in force upon the street car system of Glasgow. The text was supplied by a special correspondent of The Louisville Herald, who, in furnishing various data regarding the salaries paid the Glasgow employes, drew the conclusion, supported with evident satisfaction by The Beacon, that the municipality of the Scottish city does not concern itself very much with the welfare of its servants. He also concluded Premier Gouin of Quebec has made that the men of Glasgow's street car from which it selects daily a choice floral

For this ridiculous insinuation there is no warrant whatever. Put into plain English, it means that because municipal ownership in Britain has greatly bettered the position of the wage earner, therefore, in Canada it would do precisely the reverse. But the true conclusion is that, if municipal ownership, under British industrial conditions, has proved so beneficial both to the general public and to the employes, under Canadian industrial conditions valuable results. Canadians are too intelligent to be deceived by such illogical and fallacious bits of special pleading. The conference between the board of control and the council of Toronto Junction yesterday with regard to the proposition made by the latter that the Junction be taken into the city's arms did not seemingly bring the project any nearer realization, except in so far as that Mayor Smith declared a willingness to give up the request for a fixed 10 year assessment. The Junction is not willing to come in without being a separate ward with two representatives in the city council; while the councillors take the stand that any annexation must be unconditional on the part of the district to be added. This was the deadlock arrived at in the brief discussion that followed adjournment to luncheon. There will be a second conference later, but no date has been fixed.
