"FIGHTING FATHER" HAD
PICTURESQUE CAREER

United States Chaplain Who Introduced Athletics in Navy—Once Knocked Out "Tom" Sharkey

New York, Nov. 22.—The Rev. William Henry Donnelly Reaney, known for two decades as "The Fighting Father" of the United States navy, is dead from acute stomach trouble, after a illness of a month.

He was taken from his room in the Army and Navy Club on October 17 to an hospital and had been gradually sinking ever since. With him at the time of his death were Father Lopez, his cousin, several other priests, and his sister, Mrs. Annie McKenzie, of Montreal, who came here when it was known that his condition was serious.

Father Reaney's career in the navy was one of the most picturesque ever enjoyed by a chaplain, and he was beloved by the sailors, who served on his ships for the last twenty years. He was born in this city and was in his 50th year in 1889 he was appointed to the navy from Maryland and served on several ships. His last post at sea was on the battleship "U.S.S. Oregon."

During the battle of Manila Bay, Father Reaney was chaplain on Admiral Dewey's flagship, the Olympia, and it is said that his example was an inspiration to all his "boys" as he called the gunners and sailors.

He was said to be the father of boxing in the navy, and also introduced other athletics among the sailors. Father Reaney was always ready to put on the gloves with the sailors, and was a professional boxer. It is related of him that he was the only man in the navy who ever defeated Tom Sharkey, a sailor heavyweight pugilist, who fought Jeffries and other champions. The story is that Sharkey was obstreperous and interrupted divine services, and the priest reproached him and the upshot of the matter was that they put on the gloves. Father Reaney, with his clean hitting and scientific knowledge of the sport, soon placed the pugilist hors de combat, and from that time on never had any further trouble with Sharkey. Father Reaney was a friend of Roosevelt, with whom he often boxed.

BRITISH IGNORE GREEK SOLDIERS

But French Are Friendly With Them.

SALONIKI A MODERN BABEL

Port Said Outdone by Strange Conglomeration—One Tiny Greek Destroyer Among Huge Fleet of Foreign Vessels

our procession of ships going and coming and from their standards trail the most unexpected flags; Roumanian, Belgian, Dutch, Russian, Egyptian, all engaged in some way in victualing the foreign troops concentrated on the doorstep of the Balkans.

Huge trans-Atlantic liners, French and British, laden with soldiers, glide toward the harbor whose entrance is guarded by a common tug, metamorphosed into a warship, by armor and a mounted gun or two. The warship at the gate of Greece's second port flits the French, not the Greek flag. Each entering vessel is hailed and while not visited, is requested to give an account of itself, before it is permitted to press the gateway in the net net whose presence across the harbor is marked by a line of floats.

Greek Destroyer There

Within the harbor whose safety is secured by this net against submarines, the scene is even more animated. Not since the last Balkan war have so many ships gathered before Saloniki. Out in the roadstead lie French and British warships, and one Italian man-of-war. To defend the interests of Greece, a tiny Greek destroyer hugs the shore, a presence of war, the lone reeve of the Gulf of Saloniki reveals a conglomeration of strange flags and of every class of ship, it is as nothing in comparison with the quays. Not Port Said, nor Marseilles, ever knew so polyglot a babel or saw such kaleidoscope of costumes. There are French "police" in their sky-blue uniforms, French Alsace Chasseurs, then a Shantere on the side of the head, French colonial troops, Turcos, Senegals, in baggy khaki bloomers and short gaiters; French nurses with red pompons on their round caps; French Dragons, with horse-tails in their helmets; French officers of every description; French sailors, and commandant of all, calm red-toussered French Territorials. Now and then these curdles draw to one side to make room for a column of Greek Mountain Artillery. Again straggling lines of Greek infantry take the right of way.

British Ignore Greeks

Afraid, bands of British Tommies push their way down the crowded streets. British officers, come in hand, sweep the sidewalks from side to side, driving the countless itinerant vendors into the street. French salute Greeks, Greeks salute French. But the British salute only the British.

Commonplace as are the inhabitants of Saloniki at any time they are more so than ever now, increased as the population has been by refugees from Serbia, Macedonia and Thrace. Among the permanent inhabitants, to judge from the streets, Turks seem to predominate. Besides the Greeks, the Jews and the Turks, the quays of Saloniki are picturesque also with bearded hook-nosed, beardless of nondescript nationality, Armenians in Asiatic robes, porters that might have stepped from the Arabian Nights.

When night falls the lights at the mast heads and in the port holes of the assembled ships spring out. At the docks a huge French transport is unloading its cargo of human beings. The shouts of the men the clank of cranes come across the water without cease the whole night through.

At midnight the cafes close. The lights in the harbor go out one by one. Patrols of soldiers with bayonets set French, Greek, British—march up and down the pitch black side streets in search of stragglers. Save these there are no signs of war.
