SPREAD OF BOLSHEVISM WILL BANKRUPT NATIONS

Russian Government to Organize Foreign Legion to Fight Bolshevists—Capt. Weidie, Who Served With Canadians on Murman Coast, Talks of Military Situation and Trade Opportunities There.

"If Bolshevism is not crushed it will spread over the world, and all the nations will have to go bankrupt. If the Allies crush the Bolshevists they will be welcomed in Russia, and will have the best chance in the exploitation of a great country amazingly rich in natural resources. If they fail to undertake the job, the Germans will take the place of the Bolshevists, and therein there, exploiting the country for their own purposes. If Germany is left to work her will with Russia, she will gain a great deal more than she lost in the war. Germany has the industries, and Russia has the raw materials. The Germans will take the brains and Russia the personnel—the cheap labor. If German brains and industry are united to Russian resources, Germany will soon become a great power again."

Such is the view of Captain Victor Weidie of Winnipeg, who was in the city yesterday on his way to the West from North Russia.

During the summer of 1918 the British government learned that a German force was advancing through Finland with the object of occupying the Baltic shores. The Allies decided to send a small force to the Murman Coast, and the War Office asked the Canadian authorities to supply a small detachment for this expedition. Among the officers of this detachment was Major D. King Hasen of St. John, who is now on the Atlantic homebound. The Allied Expedition which landed on the Murman Coast never had any encounters with the Germans, but later on was engaged in many battles with the Bolshevists. The Canadian detachment which numbered less than one hundred became well liked by the other Allied forces as good fighters, and were popular among the civil population, not being inclined to look down upon the natives because they were ignorant and incompetent.

"A great deal has been said lately in the British newspapers about the peculiar military situation in North Russia," said Capt. Weidie, who was born in Russia. "The public, however, has not a clear conception of affairs there. The territory in North Russia which was occupied by the Allied forces has about one and a half million inhabitants. This is too small a population to enable the Russian authorities to organize a force of their own strong enough to hold back the Bolshevists. The inhabitants have had no previous military training, and have no confidence in themselves. It has been necessary to keep Allied

Only forty-four persons took advantage this month of the assistance given at the Free Dispensary maintained by the Anti-Tuberculosis Society. The Society has two thousand copies of a pamphlet entitled "What You Should Know About Tuberculosis," which are to be distributed among the school children.

It was suggested that a committee should wait upon the Board of Health to see if that body would consider paying some portion of the salary of a second nurse, who is badly needed.

The doctors' reports told of twenty-seven cases examined by Dr. Paris, seven by Dr. Logan, six advised to go to River Glade, and six to the St. John County Hospital, several were pronounced incurable.

Mrs. Richard O'Brien, visitor for last month, reported that thanks were due the Red Cross Society for a splendid donation.
