Dear Susanne:
I think that you must be a young woman because you do not seem to have much understanding of old people. I felt that I must write in answer to your reply to Home Lover in today's paper. You advised her to rent her home for a year to see how she liked apartment living. May I warn her very seriously not — I repeat NOT — to even consider giving up her home. Many, many old men try to talk their wives into leaving houses for the same reason. They SAY that it is to make life easier for the wife. But most wives know how to adjust their living to old age, and it is generally the old fellow himself who hates to leave his armchair to mow grass or shovel snow, although a little exercise would be good for him providing he takes it easy. Tell Home Lover that if she likes her present life style she should not consider changing it in her old age. If she allowed you and her husband to talk her into an apartment, even on a trial basis, she would never get the old man out of the apartment again. Stick to your guns Home Lover — you'll be glad you did, and if you point out solitiously that it is for the good of his health, so will your husband.
Another Home Lover

Dear Another:
I am not as young as you think, but thank you for believing that I have a young point of view. You say that most wives know how to adjust their life when they get old, but many women become neurotic when their children are grown and leave home, leaving the women with very little to fill their days. I never advised Home Lover to sell her home, but only to satisfy her husband's desire to try apartment living for a short time. Apart from the work entailed in keeping up a large house, it is easier to close up an apartment should the couple wish to travel or even take a short holiday. Perhaps Home Lover's husband is retired and wishes to try a new style of living. Home Lover's objections were that she liked her neighborhood and had many friends near them. There are so many new apartment sites now that she could find an apartment in their very own neighborhood and the rent they would receive for their house would more than pay for their apartment. Two people rattling around in a large house sometimes present a dismal picture. Often their style of living never changes because no one has the nerve to do it. Anyway, I simply presented both sides of the coin to Home Lover and it is up to her and her husband to decide what they want to do. On a personal note, I sold a large house several years ago to move into an apartment and have never regretted it. But the fact that this suits me does not necessarily apply to others.
Letters arguing both sides of the case have been coming in. We welcome your views on the subject. Should Home Lover keep living in her house or should she allow her husband to try apartment living? Please let me know what you think.
Susanne

What'll it be?
A second-rate mower?
Or a Toro with Guardian safety?

Why leave your safety to luck? The Guardian by Toro doesn't. Note these features:
Safety Shield (illustrated) helps to guard your feet from slipping under the blade housing. Safety Deflector Bar deflects sticks and stones down into the grass. Safety Blade Guard reduces the danger of foreign objects flying out from under the mower. Safety Switch turns off engine automatically when you remove the bagging chute.

And Toro gets you off to a fast start. Your choice of Key-Lectric® or fingertip starting easy push-able or self-propelled. 19" or 21" cut. Prices start at $139.95.

Church conference

The setting was a church basement but the scenes were from around the world when Park Royal Bible Church recently held its first Missionary Conference. Members of the congregation spent weeks before the conference preparing displays that included an Indian maiden worshipping a snake being charmed by a bearded Arab; an African village that echoed with the beat of a cowhide African drum; a South American village with women working at their daily chores; and a hula dancer swaying to Hawaiian music. Parts of North American, Europe and the Far East were also portrayed.

Theme of the conference, Is it Nothing to You?, taken from Lamentations 1:12, was painted on a large sign above the pulpit of the church. Guest speakers included Rev. Elwyn Davies, of the Bible Christian Union; Rev. George Wepler, of the Africa Inland Mission; and Rev. Douglas C. Percy, author and member of the staff of the Ontario Bible College.
