NOTICE OF APPEAL

O. L. Lewis, counsel for The Plane has been served by one J. G. Kerr-solicitor for Harry C. Philp, in his recent action against this journal for alleged libel, in which the jury found prompt and unanimous verdict of "no libel"-with a notice of appeal on behalf of the plaintiff, Philp.

It is evident that the plaintiff, Philp, and those behind him are unwilling to accept the verdict of the jurymen and the judgment entered by his lordship, Chief Justice Meredith, and the appeal asks that the verdict be set aside and the judgment quash-

The plaintiff, Philp, is employed by the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway in their offices here. The appeal is supported by more affidavits made out by Philp and Kerr.

As The Planet stated both before and at the conclusion of the trial, this il is at a loss to understand the action of Mr. Philp.

LETTER WRITING.

Decline as an Art Caused by the The wonderful development of the newspaper may be looked upon as a very potent factor in the decline of let-Modern Newspaper. writing as an art. The letter no longer can be regarded as primarily the carrier of news. The expression of one's opinion about great contemporary events is indeed still left to the letter, but how much of an incentive to friendly correspondence is lost by the fact that every part of the world knows of important happenings almost knows of important nappenings amount simultaneously is not to be lightly estimated, says Gunton's Magazine. The stimulus to writing that comes from having "news" to impart is done away that have that have the comes from the comes are the comes from the comes are the comes from the comes fro with, and it is not always that even the gifted letter writer can afford to lose that incitant. It is only the corresome that incitant. It is only the correspondent par excellence who knows how to attain the perfection of his art by writing delightfully of nothing, if indeed that may be called nothing which affords him a means for the employment of his delicate percentions. ployment of his delicate perception ployment of his delicate perceptular.

For the saving quality of the genuine letter is in the shillty of its author to put himself into it. If he writes about trivial things he does it with a grace of interest that disguises the triviality. He must not make his little fishes talk little these but he should, as Goldy whales, but he should, as Goldsmith himself knew how to do, make his letters of perpetual interest be-cause of the aptness of their style to the simplicity of their thought.

I cling to that perhaps fanciful theory that no primitive instinct of man is altogether lost. It is modified, amplified, refined; that is all. With all our religious are are hardware will. culture we are barbarians still. Mar is a clothed savage. And now and again he delights in doffing the clothing and returning heartily to savagery. How delightful the feel of the briny breeze and the bolsterous wave on the bare pelt! Mr. Edward Carpenter rails at the, I think, eleven layers of clothing that intervene between our skins and the airs of heaven. Whitman reveled in his nude sun bath. What a treat, too, sometimes to get away from the multicoursed dinuer and to bite downright audibly into simple food in the fresh air and to lap water noisily from the brook! Well, walking perhaps is the primal in-stinct, ancient as Eden, where the Lord God walked in the garden in the cool of the day. And if my theory is correct walking will persist till in recovrect walking will persist uit in recovered paradise man walks with his Maker again. No mechanical contrivance for locomotion will extirpate the tribe of tourists, of those who walk from love of walking.—Arnold Haultains in Allantic. tain in Atlantic.
