AIRMEN LANDED ON RHINOCEROS

Air Encounters in East Not so Deadly as on the West Front

JUST AS EXCITING

ROBERT CAMERON
Of Toronto, who, when overcome by a shock of 2,300 volts from a live electric wire, fell 30 feet from a pole, and perhaps owes his escape from death to the fact that he alighted in an automobile.

So much attention has been concentrated of late on the operations of the Royal Air Force in France that people are a trifle apt to forget the equally gallant work of the detachments in distant war areas. Possibly these detachments are not so constantly in action against such well-equipped opponents as are the people on the western front, but in many ways their work is more arduous, and the risks, if less in some ways, are greater in others.

So far as the Near East is concerned conditions are much as they are in France, except that on both sides the airplanes used are not, as a rule, of the very latest type, nor are they used in such vast numbers. For example, in the Balkans and in Palestine the Germans were using the Kokker monoplane long after the Albatross biplane in general use in France. We, on our side, were being moderately "B. E." biplanes in those areas for some time after they had been replaced in the west by Bristol Fighters and De Havillands.

Surprise for a Turner "Star." Apropos of this custom of relegating the older type to the minor wars a good story comes from Palestine. One of the local "star turns" of the German flying troops ("feldfliegertruppen") had just acquired a brand new Albatross, and considered himself at once to be the king of the air in those parts. The first day he took it out to meet two British machines, which he thought that he recognized as Martinsyde "elephants," an excellent type of machines which was then becoming a trifle out of date.

As he flew toward them he climbed rapidly so as to get the upper berth for his usual dive into his victim's back. Naturally, when the British machines climbed also, and that the German's annoyance, they climbed as well as he did. So he set to work to climb in earnest, and at that those Britishers climbed as fast as ever. Finally he reached his "absolute ceiling" and could go no higher, and to his intense disgust the others went on above him.

Seeing that he was now at a disadvantage the German pilot did the wisest thing—pushed the nose of his Albatross down and dived for his life, confident that at any rate he could dive faster than his big, and to his mind, clumsy-looking enemies. He was therefore thoroughly alarmed to find that not only did they descend as fast as he did, but they manoeuvred at the same time so as to cut him off from his own lines. Never a shot did they fire—they just "sleighered" him over the heads of the British army until he was forced to land on a British air-drome, where they landed quietly beside him.

But an Ear Drum. So fast did the German dive that he burst an ear drum as he neared the ground, though he could have avoided doing so if he had not been so surprised at the speed of the British machines that he forgot to swallow on the way down to relieve the pressure on his ear in the usual way.

However, despite his damaged ear the first thing he did when he climbed out of his machine was to go over and inspect the machines of his conquerors. And only then did he discover that he had been up against two of the newest Bristol Fighters, carrying three machine guns apiece, either of which could have blown him to bits in the sky if they had been so disposed. It had never struck him that two of the newest British machines might arrive at a minor war area just when his new Albatross arrived, and he certainly had no suspicion that any machine of such size could have the heels of the fastest German machine of the day.

In the Balkans, also, the Germans something over a year ago presumed too much on the elderliness of the British machine in the locality. The very first time that the Gotha formations, generally known as the "Bucharest Squadron" from its exploits in bombing that defenceless city—went over to bomb Salonica they lost two machines, one going out and one going home, through meeting a young British pilot on a machine which looked like one of our quite old two-seaters, but was really a particularly novel form of single-seater "faked up" locally in the Royal Flying Corps workshops to fit the ingenious ideas of the pilot himself and his commanding officer.

Certainly nothing could exceed the ingenuity shown by the flying people generally on all these distant war areas, and one earnestly hopes that when the official story of the R. N. A.S. and the R.F.C. and later of the R.A.F. comes to be written, full credit will be given to the people who carried on under the most appalling conditions.

Nothing happened very similar in the East African campaign, when a two-seater came down and was smashed in the scrub, again without being hit with a motor car carrying tools and stores to save the engine and other valuable parts.

Every day while they were working on it the officers commanding the detachment used to fly over from the air-drome and drop bags of fresh food and little luxuries for the men. Then, after circling around to see how the work was progressing, he would fly back home again without landing for any attempt to land and inspect the job would merely have meant another smashed airplane.

As in an Arabian adventure, landing was impossible for the relief machines. However, they carried food and cigarettes, and also a pocket compass and encouraging messages and flasks of stimulants.

Two or three times a day a machine would come over to see that the two tramps were keeping to the right line of country, and finally, after a week or so of hard travelling, the wanderers came into camp, very weary and worn, and that pretty bad with fever, but otherwise unhurt.

There is also a story, less well authenticated, of an airplane which came down in the bush and was disturbed by a rhinoceros, who, being mightily offended at this strange thing from the skies which interrupted his meditations, proceeded to dance a sarabande in the middle of the wreck. The splintered parts stuck into even his thick hide, and the tanglement of wires irritated him by refusing to break like the ordinary bush creepers in which he was accustomed, so he finished up by lying down and rolling the whole thing flat. Meantime, the pilot and passenger, thankful to have escaped his personal attention, "beat it," and reached their air-drome, which was not far off.

GIRLS REPLACE BOYS.
Colborne, Aug. 1.—"Camp Foch," on the lake two miles west of Colborne, at McLennan's Grove, is again occupied this week. The autos which took the Colborne Boy Scouts back to town conveyed the three companies of Girl Guides, from Colborne, with their captains, to the camping ground. The boys say that it was a splendid camp, and the girls are every bit as enthusiastic.

Says Corns Stop Burning, Then Lift Right Off Without One Bit of Pain

Hospital records show that every time you get a corn you invariably get a corn. It is not a matter of time, but of pain, which is needless, says a Cincinnati authority who tells you that a quarter ounce of a drug called Foot Ease but is sufficient to rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or callus without even one little tinge of pain.

This drug is sticky but dries at once and is claimed to just shrivel up and fall off, inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin.

If your wife wears high heels she will be glad to know of this.

MASONS FORM A WAR LEAGUE

To Devote Entire Resources of Order to Aid Disabled Soldiers

By Courier Leased Wire.
Cleveland, O., Aug. 1.—Subject to the approval of the war department and the sanction of the higher Masonic bodies the entire resources of the Masonic bodies throughout the world will be used to assist soldiers and sailors disabled on the battlefields of Europe under a movement launched here last night at a meeting of the representatives of every branch of Masonry. The war league for Masonic service was tentatively formed.

The efforts of the fraternity would be to assist disabled men in making themselves sustaining before, during or after vocational training, given them by the government. Tentative plans call for the use of Masonic employment under research bureaus, hospitals and buildings and funds, thus utilizing an organization which would be ready at the first request for help.

Under the plans each of the three million Masons in the world will be asked to devote time and efforts in the work. Details will be communicated to branches throughout the United States and Canada and after vocations training given them by the government. Tentative plans call for the use of Masonic employment under research bureaus, hospitals and buildings and funds, thus utilizing an organization which would be ready at the first request for help.

POLICE COURT

W. C. R. James, an eighteen year old youth, pleaded guilty in the police this morning to the theft of $350 from a relative and gave the police information which led to the recovery of $270 hidden in an upholstered chair in the prisoner's boarding house.

James, when arrested, pleaded not guilty, and it was not until this morning that he reversed his plea, and confessed to the theft. He was allowed to go on suspended sentence on agreeing to make restitution of the money and making good the chair which led to the recovery of $270 hidden in an upholstered chair in the prisoner's boarding house.

DOCTOR URGED AN OPERATION

Instead I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Was Cured.

Baltimore, Md.—"Nearly four years I suffered from organic troubles, nervousness and headaches and every month would have to stay in bed most of the time. Treatments would relieve me for a time but my doctor was always urging me to have an operation. My sister asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before consenting to a operation. I took five bottles of it and it has completely cured me and my doctor was all the time urging me to have an operation. My sister asked me to try Lydia E. PROPOSAL liberty, but the foreign secretary saw no sign of any country consenting to abandon the employment of tariffs if it considered them necessary. He believed that Mr. Thomas would and that labor would not abandon this method of dealing with economic problems.

M. J. Balfour also contended that universal disarmament only was possible if it could be proved that the new interest arrangement was effective. It had been suggested for withdrawing the world's peace successfully.

"The last four years," said the Foreign Secretary, "have convinced the nations that war is a very costly and brutal thing, but not that it is a thing to be thrust aside."

"Frankly looking around on the world, I see the greatest of nations quite as ready to quarrel with each other as the most ambitious of their predecessors."

Lord Robert Cecil, Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, urged that the conditions of peace ought to be made more favorable to those nations prepared to give a league.

The discussion in the way of running such a league was so serious, he added, that only by the united efforts of all men of good will could it possibly be put into execution.
