CORONATION

peculation as to what King Will Wear in June Next.

London, Feb. 14.—Much specula-tion has been rife lately on the subject of the crown that the King will assume during the coronation ceremony, and an idea seems to have gained ground that alterations in form and design are in contemplation. It can be stated with authority that no such changes are intended, and that the sole modification that will be made will be that of adapting it to his Ma-jesty's head. To effect this the open-work rim, in front of which blazes the famous sapphire bequeathed by Car-dinal York to King George III, must be somewhat enlarged, and it is ex-pected that this work, which presents no difficulty whatever to an expert, jeweler, will be completed before the crown, with the rest of the regalia, is wanted to bear its all-significant part in the State opening of Parliament by the King in January. In carrying out the enlargement a few more precious stones will probably be required for the rim, which has alternately sap-phires and emeralds, richly set in diamonds, around it.

With regard to the crown for Queen Alexandra, the case is different, and here an altogether new diadem is probable. The Consort's crown, made for Queen Mary of Modens, wife of James II., is not specially artistic in concep-tion, or valuable in execution. Her present Majesty has had various designs submitted to her, but has not yet finally selected any of them. Whatever form may ultimately be chosen, it will be largely decided by the Queen herself, whose exceptional taste with regard to the arrangements of precious stones is being exercised to render this a uniquely beautiful and diffufied crown. At present there are no indications that the Koh-i-Noor will be incorporated in it.
