Why The Dollar Is Worth Less

(Montreal Herald)

Most people have an idea what "watering stock" means. That there is such a thing as "watering" money is not generally known. Many are familiar with the jargon of the economists hear that one of the causes of the high cost of living is the inflation of currency. They do not know exactly what it means, but realize that it is something unhealthy, like enlargement of the heart, or the "Flu". They hope that currency will get better as soon as possible. Getting more of the currency is a panacea that does not seem to cure.

There is a lot more of what we call money in the country, without change-few years ago. This includes notes and bank deposits. But there is no increase of the things that people want to buy or hire, such as houses, food clothing. By doubling the amount of money in the country, without changing the quantity of goods, people may have twice as much money as they had before and be no better off. They cannot buy any more than they could before, because there will be no more to buy. Thus prices will go up, and an article which formerly cost $1 may cost $2. Money is only the yardstick for measuring the relative value of goods. Lengthening the stick does not increase the amount of goods to be measured.

How did this ailment, this inflation with which our currency is afflicted, come about? All nations during the war issued bonds far in excess of the amount of the people's savings. The money that the governments collected was borrowed. Each country's future ability to pay was capitalized and became part of the money system of the country. Thus the money supply was greatly increased and prices went up accordingly. The dollar will not buy as much as it would five years ago.

What governments are trying to do is to find out if certain people are not concealing the facts about the quantity of goods, and thus making the purchasing power of the dollar even less than it should be. With the strictest honesty high prices in a measure will continue. Economy, buying in one's own country every thing possible, and production to the very utmost can increase the power of the dollar.

Everything which curtails production will increase prices, make money of less value, no matter how much more of it you may get. Interfering with means of transportation goods or material, or the facility of getting workers to and from their employment, are ways of reducing production just as much as shutting down places of production. The more this interference takes place, and the more effective it is, the more is the value of the dollar kept down, and high prices in all things kept up. This is a point that we should never lose track of, or carelessly ignore.

BOIESTOWN

Boiestown, Sept. 12—Miss Florence Hendry of South Devon has resumed her duties at the C. N. R. station.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church held a very successful tea and concert Tuesday evening. Doaktown talent assisted at the concert and rendered some especially enjoyable numbers.
