SOMETHING TO THINK OVER.

You are aware that you cannot go without food and still retain your strength; yet you do neglect the exercise and recreation necessary to perfect health and long life. Why don't you buy a bicycle, ride it and add ten long years to your life? You can then, with clear brain and added energy, accomplish more than you do now, and in less time. With an easy-running Stearns Bicycle you can save enough time to enable you to make delightful outings. The Stearns is called the Yellow Fellow because of its orange finish; we have it in black if you prefer.

Spectacles.

OVER TWENTY-FIVE YEARS I have been in the Spectacle business, and during that time have fitted hundreds and hundreds of persons. Some had put off getting glasses so long that they could not see a large 4-inch letter A without going within 2 or 3 feet of it, and might have gone blind if they had put off getting glasses much longer. Others had been fitted, or rather misfitted, with wrong glasses by travellers and charged a great deal more than they ought to have been. This year our traveller, Mr. C. H. White, intends calling on parties at their homes in the country to test eyes and show samples of our goods. Should he call on you I bespeak for him your favorable consideration, and any order you may give him will be filled as soon as possible and guaranteed by me. Glasses can also be exchanged at the store, CAMERON BLOCK, city, if after a trial they do not prove as satisfactory as you wish.

"I know very well how to cure hams," said Orrie, "but the trouble with me just now is how to find out the way to procure them."

SHORTNESS OF BREATH.

"Since last year I have had serious heart trouble caused by malaria. Shortness of breath, smothering spells, restlessness, violent palpitation, etc., often made me gasp for breath. On procuring Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills I found to my surprise and delight that they gave almost instant relief. I got healthy, restful sleep, my heart troubles disappeared, and I now feel very well and strong indeed." Mr. Hugh Moore, Ingersoll, Ontario. Make this statement for the public good.

PAIN IN THE BACK.

DEAR SIR,—I was troubled with pain in the back for months, and after trying several remedies, without effect, thought I would use Hayward's Yellow Oil. I am glad to say that after using two bottles I am completely cured. I cannot recommend this excellent remedy too highly.

MISS ANNA CHAPMAN, South River, Ont.

PROVIDENCE THANKED.

It is with pleasure that I recommend B. B. B. for the cure of indigestion and impure blood. I had tried many medicines, but received no benefit, until I used B. B. B. and was cured in a few days.

MRS. WM. LOCKE, Chatham, Ont.

BABY WAS CURED.

DEAR SIR,—I can highly recommend Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Cherry. It cured my baby of Diarrhoea after all other means failed, so I give highest praise. It is excellent for all bowel complaints.

ANGELICISM AS IT IS.

In a thoughtful and scholarly article on "Angelicism as It Is," in the current issue of the Irish Ecclesiastical Record, the Rev. Luke Rivington, himself a convert to the church from Anglicanism, presents some of the difficulties with which an Anglican clergyman has to contend in his efforts to prevent members of his flock from "going over to Rome." With the isolation of the church of England is referred to an inquiring mind the Anglican clergyman is very much at a loss how to account for it satisfactorily, for every one knows that it is simply a matter of fact that no one belonging to the Greek schism has ever condescended to 'receive' in an Anglican church. This difficulty is met by saying 'it will come.' And there are many other things that are 'to come,' according to some of the Anglican clergy. Agreement as to vital doctrines between the bishops is 'to come,' a 'wind will blow' which will prevent the hurricanes that sometimes lift young men and young women off their feet and out of the path of rectitude into the path of vice. "I want to do something great, to accomplish some great achievement," says the young man, and meantime he neglects the little beginnings which lead to such results and are essential to their achievement. "It's so like a boy to do so. It's so like a girl. It's so like a young man or a young woman to act that way."

Thus foolishly fond parents, and thoughtless friends exclaim, adding, "they have no harm in it. Fiddlesticks! They are not acting as the boy, or girl, or young man, or young woman ought to act, and so they are seeking evil and it will be a great mercy if they escape it. These little beginnings of evil must be resisted. 'Twas only a little word, quip-quick, but sharp and cutting, hurled at a dear old aunt, or, perhaps, grandmother; nay, not infrequently at mother or father. 'I didn't mean it,' you afterwards explain. But, if your heart was full of the right kind of spirit you would have uttered it? Mind your 'little words' hereafter. What a mockery of love! We say the blarney things, the meanest words, to our nearest, who ought to be dearest. But let us not console ourselves with the thought that this is quite natural. Let us be honest with ourselves and recognize the underlying meanness that is in it. We take from others much that we will not take from our relatives, because we know that they will estimate us according to our words, or we fear that they will make us pay in some way for our outbreaks against them. Any kind of temper, we think, will do for relatives who, we seem to imagine, have no right to expect so much from us as have strangers, or ordinary acquaintances. How many who decided that they were "men now" at twenty-one, and would brook no counsel or direction, find themselves nearing thirty, with several good years lost following some will-o'-the-wisp that looked like greatness? They made a high jump, but it did not put them far ahead, and it is well if it did not strain them beyond recovery. They never began life—they just jumped into the midst of things—and oh, how lonely they must have found it, when in deep water, with nothing but their pride to sustain them!

With thankfulness their restoration to health by the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Think of the vast army who have been cured by this medicine.

Men, women, and children, who have suffered the consequence of impure blood, eruptions, dyspepsia, nervousness, sleeplessness.

They have tried other medicines and have failed to obtain relief. They tried Hood's Sarsaparilla and it did them good. They persevered in its use and it accomplished permanent cures. Do you wonder that they praise it and recommend it to you?

Little Things. (Catholic Review.)

How often we hear said: "Oh that is a little thing!" as if it were not worthy of any attention. Yet the little things, as they are called, have frequently much to do with success in great undertakings, and are never so unimportant as to leave one free to neglect or overlook them. That one whose life is fully occupied will necessarily find a number of "little things" to do and, indeed, the most that we can do to help others is precisely in the performance of the minor offices of life. Few of us have the means, or the opportunity of bestowing great favors; but there is no one who cannot find opportunity for granting small ones, and he is a great benefactor who willingly aids his fellow man according to his means and opportunity, be they great and frequent, or small and few; for it is the disposition in which the favor is done, not its size or frequency, that gives it chief value to it. And when something to be done, some business affair, is to be carried on, some professional matter to be attended to, a single detail should be forgotten; for a seemingly insignificant circumstance may turn out to be of serious import. That far-famed lawyer, the late Charles O'Connor, used to think out every possible detail, not only of his own side of the case, but also of the other side; so that he was prepared for every attack. And, indeed, it was said of him that, frequently, when his opponent had finished, Mr. O'Connor could still give him points. Amid the intricacies of a diagnosis, what least symptom can the physician afford to leave unconsidered? Hence the excellence of providing skilled nurses who note down everything that takes place in the doctor's absence and can therefore keep him informed of the vagaries, as well as of the steady march of the disease. Listening to the recitals of their experience, we are astonished at the number of instances in which business men point to their attention to small matters as the corner stone of their success. If young people, in their intercourse with each other, would only omit the "little familiarities" which are so often permitted, but might better be left out of the programme of their lives, they would preserve their self respect and lessen the number of regrets in after days. If parents and guardians would only notice the straws that show which way the wind blows, they might prevent the hurricanes that sometimes lift young men and young women off their feet and out of the path of rectitude into the path of vice. "I want to do something great, to accomplish some great achievement," says the young man, and meantime he neglects the little beginnings which lead to such results and are essential to their achievement. "It's so like a boy to do so. It's so like a girl. It's so like a young man or a young woman to act that way."

Thus foolishly fond parents, and thoughtless friends exclaim, adding, "they have no harm in it. Fiddlesticks! They are not acting as the boy, or girl, or young man, or young woman ought to act, and so they are seeking evil and it will be a great mercy if they escape it. Father Hewitt Passes Away.

The distinguished superior general of the Paulist Congregation is released from his sufferings, and we shall, in speaking of that emancipation, depart from the conventional form and say we are profoundly thankful that God in His mercy has called His servant away. It is no secret that for the last couple of years of the life of that fine old priest was one prolonged physical agony. It is but a little time since he was receiving the felicitations of many on the occurrence of his golden jubilee of priesthood, and yet few really knew what suffering was his under the bright and cheerful air which he wore all through. Father Hewitt was one of the true heroic mould—the great hearts who are made of the stuff of which martyrs are made—large in frame, great of heart, saintly in soul. How beautiful is the contemplation of such lives as his! It is they who make the Church the witness she is of the living faith. How we ought to thank God for giving us such bright examples of the spiritual life in an age so gangrened with material and animal ideas and passions! And out of what unpromising materials, and out of what unprosperous, as such examples proceeded! Father Hewitt's case is a type. Nurtured in the lap of New England's Puritanism, the son of a Presbyterian clergyman, destined himself for the same sphere of life, and consequently to the career of either active or passive hostility to the Catholic Church, he yet found himself, when seeking after theological truth, unable to withstand the charm which that Church presented, and was at length irresistibly drawn into her bosom. We do not think there could be any stronger proof of the truth and efficacy of the Church than such examples. Here we behold human reason in its highest developments—for no intellect could possibly be keener than Father Hewitt's—taking up the tremendous task of proving the truth of religion and faith down to the ultimate term of logical analysis, and arguing himself out of the religion in which he had been nurtured and trained, and into one despised and abhorred by his Puritan ancestors. Between the cases of Dr. Newman and Father Hewitt, in regard to the mental conflict which preceded conversion, some parallel is apparent. It is evident, too, that there was much in common between these two minds in those subtle intricacies of thought, wherein the keenness of true logical penetration, like the diamond in the rock drill, is necessary to cut through ingrained and immemorial fallacy. They were, as a matter of fact, fast friends for many years. We mourn for the great priest, the missionary, the scholar, the masterly theologian who has quitted our company. We know that the Church will feel his loss, but God, who has been pleased to call him away, full of years and honors, and full of suffering nobly borne, will in His own good time help us to fill the void. For the sap of the immortal tree is drawn from imperishable roots on earth, to last as long as the world shall last. The fruits as they bloom are plucked for the kingdom of God, and of these the saintly soul now departed was one of the brightest and purest.—Catholic Standard and Times

Napoleon as a Catechist.

Some thirty years ago the Archbishop of Bordeaux, being at Aix les Bains, was called to visit a dying woman, daughter of a general that had become celebrated in the wars of the First Empire. The venerable prelate was moved even to tears in listening to the dying woman speak of religion; for she spoke as few could do. And having asked her who had instructed her so perfectly, he received the following answer: "Monseigneur, under God I owe my religious instruction to the Emperor Napoleon. I was on the island of St. Helena with all my family when I was only ten years of age. One day the Emperor called me to him, and taking my hand he said to me: 'My child, you are a pretty girl now, and you will be still more beautiful in a few years; nevertheless these advantages of years will expose you to great dangers in the world. And how can you overcome those dangers unless you have a large fund of religion? Unfortunately your mother cares but little about religion and your papa still less; therefore I will fulfil the obligation that rests on them; come tomorrow and I will give you your first lesson.' For two consecutive years, and several times each week, I was taught my catechism by the Emperor. Each time he made me read a lesson out loud, and then he explained it to me. When I was beginning my thirteenth year, his Majesty said to me: 'I think that you are now well enough instructed. You should soon receive your first Communion. I will have a priest come from France who will prepare you for that Great Action, and will prepare me for death.' And he kept his promise."—Ave Maria.

Albania and the Sacred Heart.

According to a writer in the Messenger of the Sacred Heart for July, the present condition of the Christians of Albania under the Turkish government is anything but an enviable one. The devotion of these Catholic Christians, however, to the Sacred Heart is gaining for them many spiritual blessings which they have been for years deprived of. And yet their condition is still most pitiable. They are still the victims of the brutality and hatred of the Mussulmans, especially in the mountain districts. In Scutari, the capital, the presence of the European consuls helps to maintain order, and the zeal of the clergy has done much to improve the customs of the Catholic population. The pontifical seminary, founded in 1859, has recently been entrusted to the Jesuits by the Sacred Congregation of Propaganda. This seminary supplies the whole of Albania with priests. The same congregation has instituted a special missionary for the Jesuit Fathers, several of whom are constantly

Eighty Unfortunates.

Is the Estimated Proportion in Every Hundred People in this Climate Affected with that Dread Disease Catarrh—How easily the Proportion would be Reversed if Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder was Universally Used—It Relieves in 10 Minutes.

Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder benefited me at once, and it's so easy to apply," says Rev. W. H. Main, of Emmanuel Baptist Church, Buffalo. Thousands more in professional, and in the humbler callings of life, could say Amen to this statement. Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder gives relief in from 10 to 60 minutes in most acute cases. Now is the season of severe weather changes, and now is the season when disease germs develop. That slight sneezing cold in the head may mean that the seeds of chronic catarrh have been sown. The tested cure is the safest and quickest. Sold by GEO. E. HUGHES.

Selected Lives.

Selected lives are lives singled out from the mass; set apart, trained and commissioned unto a special opportunity. The basis of selection may be chiefly that of physical competency, as when men are selected for service in the army or in the athletic games. Or it may be chiefly that of intellectual culture, as in competitions for posts of honor in literary life. Or it may be chiefly that of spiritual efficiency, as when Christ selected apostles, saying: "Ye did not choose me, but I chose you, and appointed you, that ye should go and bear fruit, and that your fruit should abide." What thought is greater than this to a soul that is noble? To feel the appointing of God upon itself; to know that it is called out from the mass, selected and set apart for something! It is an exalting thought—so high that often at the first one cannot attain unto it. While we know that there are and ever have been selected lives, and while we all recognize selection in others who by their gifts and calling and opportunities are manifestly set apart in the world as its leaders, there is much difficulty for many a noble soul in conceiving of itself as one of the called. But when that thought comes home—when one is brought to feel that the anointing oil is upon one's own brow, and that life must henceforth have meanings reaching far beyond one's self and to the destinies of others—the mind can hold few thoughts more exalting. A deep joy rises in the soul, "a tide too full for sound or foam," a sense of having caught some of Christ's meaning when he said, "I came that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly."—Exchange.

More

Medicinal value in a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla than in any other preparation. More still is required, more care taken, more expense incurred in its manufacture. It costs the proprietor and the dealer but it costs the consumer less, as he gets more doses for his money.

More curative power is secured by its peculiar combination, proportion and process, which make it peculiar to itself.

More people are employed and more space occupied in its Laboratory than any other.

More wonderful cures effected and more testimonials received than by any other.

More sales and more increase year by year, are reported by druggists.

More people are taking Hood's Sarsaparilla today than any other, and more are lauding it today than ever before.

More and still more reasons might be given why it should take
