Ears to Reappear.

WOMEN'S PARTED HAIR NOW THE FASHION.

Fashion has decreed that women are to show their ears again. For several seasons past the fashionable woman although she may have shown her ankles, has hidden her ears with fluffy "side-whiskers."

"Hairs will be small this winter," said a noted English dress designer. "Hair must be parted in the centre and taken back as closely as possible, and without waving to the back of the head where it is worn in a distinct bun. The line of the face will be lengthened by long drop earrings."

In other words, the fashionable coiffure will be that worn by Miss Gladys Cooper in "The Second Mrs. Tanderay."

Miss Mesite Albanian in "East of Suez" wears her hair in a modified form of the new style, and Miss Marie Lohr conforms to it by having "a small head" and showing her ears, though she softens the outline by allowing a loose wave at the side.

Poets may rejoice that they can again sing the praises of what has ever been regarded as one of woman's chief charms—her shell-like ear.
