Granny visits the Newly-Weds

"Why, Granny! How are you? Goodness me, I am glad to see you; I am in such trouble. I tried to bake last night but everything turned out wrong. Then Billy eame home tired and hungry and I had nothing nice baked for him. You are just in time to help me, and we'll make Billy feel good at dinner tonight.

"Surely, dear, I will do anything I can," said Granny. "Now first of all you must phone for a bag of Hunt's Diamond Flour.

"What's that! You've never used Hunt's? Well, no wonder your baking was a failure.

That afternoon when Billy came home the odors of the baking reached him and his face fairly beamed. He went straight off to the kitchen and kissed his wife.

"Something smells mighty good, Honey-you must have had better luck today. You bet, give me homemade stuff every time-I love it-and besides it knocks the bottom from the high cost of living."

"Billy," she answered smiling, "Granny was here and located the trouble. I was not using the right flour. Granny has always used
