

to baste them on to silken under-collars precisely the shape of the outer lace stock. The other calls for fine millinery wire sewed deftly along the outline, on the under side. When worn, the petals of the flowers will extend above the inside collar, and snuggle at the nape of the neck.

A coat collar in convolvulus design is shown by No. 513. Unlike the previous models, this opens in front and it especially needs a high silk or wired foundation at the back. In applying this stock to a dressier cloth or silken coat, a becoming result comes of using white satin under the

BATTENBERG
REVERS,
CONVOLVULUS
DESIGN, No. 514.
Price of pattern,
25 cents.

BATTENBERG REVER, No. 528.
Price of pattern, 25 cents.

collar. A plaited vest of white chiffon, and some revers over white satin unite with the lace stock to trim an outer garment handsomely.

Should one not have the inclination to work out something pretty for the summer wardrobe from these models, warm weather leisure will offer an opportunity to gain time on the winter coat. A rever-collar design in convolvulus pattern which harmonizes with the stock collar suggested by the same flower is shown in No. 514.

nizes with the stock collar suggested by the same flower is shown in No. 514.

B. & A. SILKS IN HOLDERS DON'T SNARL OR TANGLE.