

In the world of today as well as in that of yesterday - and here these two activities - the production of the two countries is almost Canada day on United States day. In fact, as well as in the particular instances in which the two countries are alike as New York and Whitney. It is accepted without question that the organization of business in North America is a single, international.

It is a matter of course to compare the two countries and the geographic features and movements of the United States and Canada. One the average Canadian than the average American. One joint organization formed to cover this state of affairs in the Canadian to a large extent, which encourages the production of Canadian material into documentary, technical and factitious sources produced in the United States. An even more direct use of films to inform the Canadian Government's national film board, which was in the United States about sixty thousand copies for its production.

Close friendship and cooperation between these two countries do not obscure the fact that each is an independent nation with its own individuality.
Their cultural patterns, in many fundamental respects differ, and the difference is due largely to regional variations on a continental scale, but especially to the strength in Canada of what appears to be a distinct, English and French which is apparent in politics, in education, and in literature. Canada and the United States are good companions, and their difference in personality can only stimulate their friendly interest in each other.

June 2, 1950

BYC