

documents from which I have copied freely. I do not think I misrepresent the prevailing temper of the colonists in the extracts I have made.

I may be forgiven, if guilty of autoplaiarism, for borrowing so largely, in my chapters on New France, from my own published writings.

J. D.

NEW YORK, September, 1912.