To The Prospective Builder

You are tired of renting. You want a house of your own, so that you may call it home.

Where are you going to build it? To decide this question you have many things to take into consideration. Above all you must determine upon a location in keeping with the size and the character of the house you are prepared to build.

You must know the provisions in the deeds of the properties in different localities on different streets.

You must consider the present taxable values of the different properties as well as the probable future values, based upon reasonable indications of growth and development.

When you have selected your lot what manner of house will you build? Will it be built of brick, stone or concrete ?

What will be its architectural design?

How will you have your rooms arranged?

Do you even know how your kitchen could be arm ranged so as to take advantage of 20th Century methods and conveniences?

Hew will you heat your house, with steam, hot water or het air?

Do you know the comparative merits of the different materials and appliances you will be required to

These are a few of the many problems that confront the prospective builder that the Building and Real Estate Department, to be begun at an early date in The Toronto Sunday World, will discuss.
