Secretary Harry Wade Hicks writes from Harpoot that upon returning to that city recently he met hundreds of Arabs and Armenians going in the di-rection of Samsoon and eventually to America. All these persons were young or middle aged, able-bodied men, re-presenting the strongest element of the population in that country, and suffi-ciently well off to make the necessary "sift" to leave Turkey and pay their passage to America. He referred to the "white plague of consumption," and also to the "black plague of social disease" among us And he concluded: "A recognition of the democratic principle that it is the character of the man that dignifies the work, and not vice versa, will lead to an adjustment of the vocations of life, relieve the léarned professions of mis-fits and allow every man the poportun-ity of doing his best for the life of our ccuntry." They sound big, but they are not true. They are not supported by facts and conditions. I fear he prefers to deal in the language of flattery rather than in the language of stern truth. There can be no more important problem for our consideration than the problem of "a fair distribution of wealth." And what is a fair distribution of wealth." Is that not a fair distribution of wealth. Is that not a fair distribution of wealth. Is that not a fair distribution of wealth. Which rewards each according to his industry? That gives to each what he earns and to no man what he does not of wealth that gives wealth to him who creates and secures wealth to him who creates and secures wealth to him who saves it? Is that not the ethics of Christianity? "If a man work not neither shall he eat." Is that not the product of wealth? Is wealth not the product of labor.
