LONDON'S PROPOSED NATIONAL THEATRE

There has been a good deal of acid comment in London regarding the lack of any public announcement of the completion of the affairs of the Shakespeare Memorial National Theatre. This was partly supplied by a statement made the other day by Lord Lytton, the chairman of the general committee. He said that the movement was originally started to build and endow a National Repertory Theatre in London as soon as funds could be obtained for the purpose. In October, 1918, a site was secured on the Bedford estate in Gower street, but preparations for a big campaign to raise funds in the following year were interrupted by the war. In 1916 it was decided to offer the site to the Y. M. C. A. for the erection thereon of a Shakespeare Hut, where a series of interesting Shakespearean performances were given to the troops. They had come through the war with their capital intact, and the balance sheets were available for examination. Recently they conceived the idea of building up a company of players and a summer festival was arranged at Stratford-on-Avon with the co-operation of the committee there. They felt justified in guaranteeing £20,000 towards the expenses of the company. The experiment was a great success, but it was an essential part of the idea that the festival should be followed later in the year by a tour throughout the country. They hoped that the players would become the first company of the National Repertory Theatre. It would be very desirable for the troupe to have its headquarters at a theatre in London, but they had not felt justified in spending their funds in the somewhat speculative venture of hiring a London theatre. They hoped, however, said Lord Lytton, to carry out provincial tours. It was intended to arrange a season at the beginning of next year in Manchester, a festival at Stratford in April, and a tour during the summer. To this purpose they proposed to devote an income of £20,000, which they would receive from their decision to lease the Gower street site to the Y. M. C. A. for a further period of three years at a rent of £20,000 a year. They were as determined as ever ultimately to realize their object of erecting a memorial theatre in London so soon as they could get sufficient funds from the public.

BROKE LAW FOR AN ILL BABY

Sentence Suspended on Man Who Opened Store on Sunday

New York, Dec. 4.—Leon Leibach, proprietor of a grocery store at 880 Jennings street, The Bronx, was arraigned before Magistrate Robert C. Ten Eyck in Morrisania court charged with violating the Sabbath law. The complaint was Walter Bishop, a patrolman. According to the testimony given before the magistrate, Leibach was eating his breakfast on Sunday morning when a woman came to his home. She told him that one of her babies was ill and that she needed some sugar immediately. Leibach said that the woman's story so impressed him that he decided to open his store long enough to accommodate her. The patrolman appeared and arrested Leibach. The woman secured a half pound of sugar, however, and hurried away. The magistrate suspended sentence, saying that, while there was little doubt in his mind that Leibach was guilty of violating the Sabbath law, under the circumstances he was justified in what he did.

COSTS DRIVER $2 TO FIND HALF DOLLAR.

New York, Dec. 4.—"That's a hot one, judge. It costs me $1.50 to pick up 50 cents," said Albert Johnson, express wagon driver of No. 210 West 63rd street to Magistrate House in traffic court, after the latter had fined him $2 on a charge of obstructing traffic at Broadway and 91st street. "Your honor," said Johnson, "I plead guilty to obstructing traffic, with an explanation. I was driving along Broadway and when at 91st street I saw something shiny in the street. It was a 50-cent piece. So I stopped and picked the half dollar up."

"I'm sorry," said the magistrate, "but I'll have to fine you $2."
