CROCODILE NEARLY WON

Fierce Fight Between Man and Reptile in Chinese Timber Camp

A chance visitor to a Chinese timber camp tells in Chambers' Journal of an adventure with a crocodile, in which the crocodile came very near having the best of it. "Arriving in my boat at the little jetty or landing place," he says, "I was startled to see a white man in charge of the camp, lying on a rattan couch within a few yards of the bank, with a heavy spear in his hand, and a crocodile coiled round his neck, eating intently at a rough paper, or, better, erected in the stream.

"Throwing myself down near him in the welcome shade, I learned the following story:

"Two nights before Graham was sleeping peacefully in his little palm-leaf house, in a clearing about twenty yards from the river bank, when his dog began to growl, and refused to be silenced.

"Graham turned out and walked round the hut to ascertain the cause of the disturbance, but seeing nothing, addressed himself to the dog in his usual vigorous sailing ship language, and retired to bed again.

"Five minutes later he was once more aroused by a yell from the dog, and this time, really annoyed, he seized a stick and rushed forth to inflict punishment on the disturber of his dreams. Suddenly a dark form glided swiftly from the shadow, and Graham felt himself seized by the right knee as he was in a vice.

"Struggling to free himself he found he was in the grip of a large crocodile, whose teeth were firmly embedded in the flesh.

"Backward and forward the struggle continued—the crocodile striving to pull its destined victim to the water's edge, and Graham, hampered as he was by his imprisoned leg, fighting for his life to reach higher ground. At last the beast, hauling its victim to the ground with a shake of its powerful head, began to drag him swiftly toward the water.

"Poor Graham, feeling as he expressed it, that it was 'all over but the shouting,' determined to make one last effort for his life, and taking
