Shovelling coal below,
In the land that's lost to snow;
And he cried, "Alas!"
In his soul's despair,
"There's never—no, never,
A coal strike there!"

He saw his creditors—twenty score— Who never would shake with chills;/ And balliffs there, at the furnace door, Who had bothered his life with bills! Shovelling coal below, Where ice would stand no show! And he cried again, In the wintry air, "They're never bothered By doal strikes there!"

Found a Stradivarius.

Orange, N. J., Oct. 29-A "find" of what is said to be an Antonius Stradivarius violin has been brought to light by A. A. Denis, of this city, who bought the instrument in Morristown about two years ago. He paid $35 for it and purchased it for the use of his daughter. No particular value was placed on it at the time, although many noticed the richness of its tone. An expert found the Stradivarius label inside, and the date 1719. Mr. Denis has been offered $1,500 for the violin, but he holds it at a higher figure.

Reading, Mass., Oct. 29—A huntsman's dog brought to light this afternoon a murder just off a highway near the Wakefield line. The victim was a woman, evidently a tramp. Her identity has not been established. When first discovered by Walter Locke, whose dog drew him to the spot, the body was still warm, and blood was slowly oozing from six wounds in the head. Five were from pistol bullets, while the sixth had been, apparently, made by some sharp instrument. There was every indication that the murder had been committed cleswhere and that the body had been taken from a wagon and dragged where it was found.

Manual Training to Save the Boys. To the Editor of The Telegraph:-

Sir,—With reference to the boy question, a thought has come to me which may be of value to those who are actively engaged in trying to solve the problem in St. John.

To secure any permanent reform among the boys of a certain class, at is necessary to interest them in something that will occupy their time and energy and take them out of the grooves of vice into which they have been led.

Of course it is not possible to interest all boys in the same thing, nor is it possible to hold the interest of any boy all the time on one thing—a variety is necessi
