How Roland Garros Was

By Special Wire to the Courier.

Milan, via Paris, May 1-A motor which stalled suddenly while he was 2,000 feet in the air was responsible for the capture by the Germans of Roland Garros, the famous French aviator, according to an account of the incident given The Kriegs Zeitung of the Fourth German army and reproduced in the Corriere Della Sera here. Garros was flying over the Inglemunster-Courtrai railroad when train passed. He made a wonderful swoop from a height of 6,000 feet until he was 120 feet from the ground, describing a series of daring circles over the train and then dropping a bomb which blew up a section of the track. When sentries opened fire on him at close range, he dropped another bomb and rose to a height of 2,000 feet. Suddenly the motor stopped and the aeroplane swayed dangerously but Garros volplaned safely down and made a successful landing. He sprang out, set fire to the machine, and took refuge in a cottage. Pursuing soldiers found him after a long search crouching in a ditch behind a thick hedge. Asked if he had a com-panion, Garros gave his word that he had not. He explained that his engine had probably been struck by

While Lucy was yet a small child the parents moved to Kingston, and then again to Hamilone of them peddled most of the time through the country with a pack. Her father rented a barn from these men and began making buggies and wagons; and he built the first democrat wagon ever seen in that section. After five years residence in Hamilton they moved to Barton township, 5 miles distant, and there went into the business of hotel keeping, also building of buggies and wagons. When Lucy was 15 years old the parents again moved, this time to a place known as Grand River Swamp, and a year later she met a young Englishman named John Watts, and they were married March 27, 1838. Watts was a civil engineer and bookkeeper. Of this union two sons and one daughter were born
