AUGUST.—The shortness of our working or spring season too frequently causes neglect of the vegetable garden, and in the hurry of the season, what is done is too often done carelessly. Then the blame of a poor crop is thrown on something, but in reality nature does her work faithfully. Clean up your garden in the fall, cover it with good rich manure, or let it be applied early, so that the rains may carry the liquid parts into the soil. One ploughing is not sufficient; harrow and cross plough, then harrow again before sowing and planting. In this way a good distribution of manure is secured, and the land becomes properly pulverized. Keep down the weeds, and every farmer may then know that a vegetable garden pays well.
