In England there is a good deal of excitement in connection with the late appointments of Catholic Archbishop and Bishop by the Pope. This distribution of England into Sees, and conferring of titles without anthority of law and without previous negotiation with the Government, is regarded as improper and presumptuous, and the authorities are called upon not to permit it to be carried into execution. The tone with which the most ardent Protestant organs regard the matter may

A Medical Department was thereupon added to King's College, London, and the good effect produced by it was very soon perceptible in the conduct of the students attending the Hospitals, and even in that of those attending the Hospitals, and even in that of those attending the Hospitals, and even in that of those attending the London University. In England religion is always regarded as the most important element in education, and in all his intercourse with the people there, the Bishop observed, that even among Dissenters, he never found any who desired to separate religion from at home, and received considerable pecuniary support. It was his Lordship's intention to commence building in the Spring, and by the 1st of October to have the University in operation. The commencement would be on a scale sufficient for the object, comprising at first three faculties, viz., Divinity, Sciences and Classical Literature. He expected two men of eminence, to arrive from England by that time, who will take charge of the Scientific and Classical Literature.
