U. S. Opinion Declares Belgium Must Be Free

"No Wilhelm Von Belgium Will Be Tolerated," Says The New York Herald.

New York, Oct. 31.—In an editorial on the German announcement of the annexation of Belgium, the Herald says:

"To Americans the Kaiser's ruthless efforts fraught upon the little nation whose neutrality he was pledged to respect is the crime of the ages. If anything were needed to emphasize the enormity of this crime it is furnished by the threat of absorption based on conquest. If American sentiment could determine the result there would be no peace until the Belgians are once more in possession of their own country, with every safeguard thrown around it to insure to them the full enjoyment of the liberty for which they have so gallantly fought.

"Americans have contributed, are contributing, and will contribute liberally for the relief of suffering Belgians. They are giving to the people of King Albert—not to the subjects of any 'Wilhelm Von Belgium.'"

WOMEN WOUNDED IN BATTLE; RUSSIAN AMAZONS AT FRONT

Resort to Much Strategy to Get on the Firing Line and Make Good Soldiers When There

London, Nov. 9.—The correspondent of the Morning Post in Petrograd sends the following:

"Rumors that Przemysl in Galicia has been taken are untrue. What really happened is that the Russians capture 4,000 of the garrison, with a large amount of arms and equipment, when the garrison attempted a sortie. Cholera and typhus are reported to be raging at Przemysl.

"The number of women coming back wounded from the Russian front proves that the contingent of adventurous females in the fighting lines is considerable. These women as a rule cut their hair, assume a soldier's uniform and get secretly with the connivance of friends among the soldiers. Others start alone on various pretexts, such as seeking injured relatives, and then don male attire when they reach the front.

Woman as Scout Leader.

"A Cossack girl trooper, Helen Chobn by name, went with the full knowledge and permission of the authorities, having long been distinguished as a horsewoman, swordswoman and markswoman.

"Colonel Tomilobskaya's daughter, who in male uniform on the Augustow front distinguished herself as a scout leader, has been wounded three times."

Allow the Sale of Beer.

The newspaper Novoe Vremya severely criticises the decision of the Government to allow a resumption of the sale of beer, in a modified form, from November 14, as being at variance with the Emperor's decision and calculated to revive the dormant national appetite for strong drink.

MIST LIMITED RANGE OF VISION

And Made Shooting Difficult in Heligoland Battle

A. E. Shepherd, A.E. on His Majesty's ship Lydiard, of the Third Flotilla, writing to his old headmaster at Portobello Road School, North Kensington, describes the battle of Heligoland. He says:

"We arrived off the forts at six a.m. and an hour later we chased two destroyers, which led us into their cruisers. Being misty, we could not see more than 2,000 yards. We were led on until we came within range of their forts and cruisers. They opened fire. We were fighting broadside to broadside until noon, when our battle cruisers came along.

"Just before they appeared our ship sank a destroyer and then sent a torpedo into the Mainz. Her side was ripped open and two of her funnels and one mast went. There was no excitement amongst the ship's company, everyone kept cool. Shells were dropping all around us and whistling over our heads. We were travelling at thirty or thirty-five knots and wanted some hitting."

SAVED THE LINE LOST HIS LIFE

How Capt. Kyrke Smith Gallantly Met His Death

Mrs. Kyrke Smith, widow of Captain Kyrke Smith, of the 1st Battalion King's Liverpool Regiment, who died in Belgium from wounds, has received a letter of sympathy from Colonel Banatyne, commanding officer.

"The letter states that the captain met his death gallantly, giving his life for the battalion. On Sept. 14 the battalion was advance guard to the brigade, and found the Germans in a very strongly entrenched position.

A, B, and C companies at once attacked, and Captain Kyrke Smith's leading of his men was magnificent. They gained a lot of ground, and were then ordered to hold it. This was done against great odds and under terrific shell fire for six days.

On the seventh day they were heavily attacked, and there was a danger of the whole line being driven in. Captain Kyrke Smith's company was sent to check the main attack, and it was then he was hit.

SOME DELIRIOUS WITH ENTHUSIASM

Soldiers Dosed on Their Feet and Awoke Talking Wildest Nonsense

SOUTH of Meaux we halted and marched in the night through the forest of Crecy, east of Paris. We were utterly weary. Men slept walking; officers dared not ride because they tumbled out of the saddle. We dozed on our feet, and had horrible dreams, and woke with a start to apologise for awful crimes we had committed, and to talk the wildest nonsense. Such are the effects of complete exhaustion and fatigue and hunger.

Order Ended.

Our long ordeal came to a sudden end. For reasons we could not understand the Germans were retreating on our left and forsaking the tempting bait of Paris. On Sept. 5 we got the order to advance, and instantly new life flowed into our veins.

It is amazing how speedily we forgot our fatigue, and the mental and physical horrors we had gone through. There can be no doubt whatever about the moral effect of artillery fire. To be shot with a rifle seems a mere trifle; you have at any rate the chance of being only wounded or of having a clean death. But to be smashed into pulp by a shell—the very thought of it is hell.

Came Out Well.

The young soldiers came out of it splendidly and speedily recovered appetites. They complained of gaps that had to be constantly filled with bacon and biscuit, for our Army Service Corps, which worked miracles during the retreat, was now completely restored.

There was a little drummer-boy, 16 years old, who marched to Mons and back, and insisted on walking and carrying his kit until an officer took him in his arms and tumbled him into a wagon. Though their feet were sore, and many of them bleeding, the men stepped back to the Marne singing, "It's a long, long way to Tipperary," or the new version, "It's the wrong, wrong way to tickle Mary."

Couldn't Eat a Half Meal.

St. John's, Oct. 12, 1914. I have been troubled with indigestion for a number of years, in fact I have been so bad I couldn't eat half a meal of anything.

A friend advised me to try A.I.C. and one half pint bottle cured me. I couldn't believe I could be cured in such a short time and now I can eat anything, and food does not trouble me in the least. I think I am perfectly cured, I haven't felt indigestion this month.

I recommend this medicine to all sufferers from indigestion. You are at liberty to use my name, and anyone not believing this statement can write or consult me personally.
