NUTS TO CRACK

The primals and finals united will spell

A country which all of us like very well.

I'll try to find a garden shade.

And this escape may yet be made.

I'll have a fine new glided dome.

And build an annex to my home.

It's really more than I can do.

To hide an apple pie from Sue.

O mother, look at Jenny Ray!

She wears her best hat every day!

I'd like a tea-set painted blue,

With plates and cups and saucers,

Too.

THE KING CAT

BY

A. A. ROWLING

Willy had been taught never to leave the table without saying "Excuse me," and many other manners of good breeding, but this morning he had down his napkin and reached the door before his mother knew what he was doing. She called him back. "You have forgotten to be polite, Willy," she said, "now you must sit at the table two minutes longer."

Willy sighed as he mounted his chair. "I don't like to be here," he said, "but I will be good."

He continued to sit there, but his mind was wandering. He thought of the cat he had seen in the garden. It was a very large cat, and it was very old. It had a white face, and its eyes were blue. It was very beautiful.
