By-Product of the War.

Russia furnished one of the surprises. What it was assumed it would take long to do, was done with not loss of time. What was expected in months came in days. Those who were supposed to have known most about what was likely to happen, seem to have known the least. All the experts were astonished. No explanation having been forthcoming, it is to be presumed that they have not yet recovered from their amazement. They have had time enough to think it over.

Perhaps they need help. In a contribution to the current issue of the "Outlook," George Kennan takes vodka as his text. He admits that the per capita consumption of alcohol is larger in other countries than it is in Russia, but explains that the Russians could buy no less than a bottle at a time and could not drink on the premises where he made his purchase. So, he took it home and made short work of it.

He drinks from a pint to a quart whenever he drinks at all, and consequently becomes drunk, loses control of his facilities, and sooner or later, in one of his periodical aprees, beats his wife, sells his property at half price, sets fire to an enemy's house, or commits some crime which brings ruin upon him and his family.

When the war broke out the sale of vodka was stopped. There was nothing nominal about the prohibition—it prohibited. There is a reason. Control of the sources of supply as well as of the facilities for distribution being controlled by the Government, its fiat took immediate and complete effect. There was a resort to wood alcohol and denatured alcohol, as substitutes, but no vodka was to be had at any price. A Russian review, "Vestnik Evropa," gives this account of the effects.

"All Russia is filled with enthusiasm and gratitude. As if by the waving of a magic wand, drunkenness, debauchery, wild cries, disputing and fighting have ceased in the streets of both villages and towns. Factories and workshops are filling their orders with promptness and accuracy. In households long accustomed to poverty, strife, drunken quarrels and blows there are now peace and quiet. The peasant families are even making penny savings, which, although small, are as welcome as they are unexpected. The very face of Russia, long disfigured by alcoholic excess, seems to have been transformed and ennobled."

These and other results of the enforcement of the Little Father's edict prompt Mr. Kennan to ask: If the Russian armies in Germany and Austria are fighting more effectively now than in any previous campaign, may it not be because they are led by a better headed officer, and because the soldiers know it? It is an interesting question, being neither unimportant nor irrelevant nor inadmissible. The answer to it might assist the experts who were and are perplexed. It may enable them to understand why, in the time it took to mobilize Russia was not far behind Germany and why the Little Father's troops have proved to be such a goodly army.

There is little in vodka which is compatible with victory.

CARE OF LINOLEUM

How to Buy, Lay, Treat and Preserve Floorcloth

It would be hard to find a house in the city where linoleum is not used. Some housewives have learned the art of keeping it in order, and thus greatly extending its life, and some haven't. Here are what might be called the "laws of linoleum."

Buy the best, for it is by far the cheapest in the end. It is the most unwise and uneconomical purchase you can make—that of "cheap" linoleum.

Choose linoleum with a pattern that goes right through. Then, even if the wear on it is not uniform, the pattern remains, and the wear is unnoticeable. Don't, if your furniture is good but not new, make it look shabby by buying gaudy linoleum.

A quiet dark oak brown is the best to look at, and the best to wear too. A black-and-white pattern lights up a dark hall wonderfully, in a light room, a self-colored dark green or very dark red will tone down the excess of light.

For "narrowpaths" the strips between a carpet and the walls, very careful selection is necessary, or the carpet and the line will clash. A surround should be of the same color as the ground color of the carpet. Then you get harmony and harmony, quite apart from its effect on the eye, has a wonderful effect on temper and irritability.

If you are going to lay your own linoleum, you will need a short, sharp knife with a thick, unbreakable blade. A table knife will do, nor will scissars. To cut the edges straight, use a flat, straight-edged piece of board, of sufficient width for you to kneel on to keep it quite steady. If there are awkward angles and turns to be fitted, cut these out first in brown paper. Then damp the paper, which will make it cling to the linoleum, and carefully cut the linoleum.

Linoleum should never be placed directly on a floor. A thin felt should be laid as a foundation for the linoleum, and any warped boards planed down. Thick brown paper would do in lieu of the felt, although it is not so good.

Linoleum should never be washed with water. It rots it. A flannel dipped in paraffin is the proper way to clean dirty linoleum. It freshens the colors, and the paraffin acts as a preservative.

Marks on linoleum can be removed by briskly rubbing them with a paste made of fuller's earth and milk. Wash this off with milk and dry thoroughly. Then you could polish with any good floor polish, or apply a coat of brown hard spirit varnish. This applied at night is dry in the morning.

For a polish that is also the best preservative, there is nothing to beat beeswax and turpentine. Here is a recipe for making your own: Two ounces each of scraped beeswax and yellow soap, one ounce of white wax, one pint of turpentine, and three quarters of a pint of water. Melt with extreme care in a jar in the oven and mix well.

Help Lighten The Load.

Help lighten the load! Humidity stumbles ahead on its road, Urged on o'er thresholds, beset by the goad; Men bend under burdens of hunger and care, And women must suffer and toil and despair; Yes, even the children a tray in their arms, Are bowed by the weight of their sins!

Tea Biscuits

Put 2 cups of flour into bowl with 1 teaspoon of salt, 4 teaspoons of baking powder and 2 heaping teaspoons of lard. Chop or mix with knife until all is blended (do not mix with the hands). Make well in centre of flour. Add 1 scant cup of water or milk, mix all together. It will be a soft dough. Take half of the dough out on slightly floured board. Press into shape. Cut and put in greased pan. Use rest of the dough the same way. Do not handle, do not knead, do not roll. Biscuits need to be baked in very quick oven 12 minutes.

SOME WOMEN WORK AT STRANGE TRADES

Hundreds in England in the Coal Mining Industry—Others at Hardest Kind of Manual Labor

The enterprise of the modern woman is strikingly illustrated by the facts and figures contained in the tenth volume of the British Census recently issued after three years' preparation. For the period of ten years covered there was quite a rush of women to various fields of masculine employment. For instance the number of women law clerks increased from 267 to 2,159. In the same period the number of women doctors increased from 212 to 495, while in commerce the number of women employed had risen from 59,944 to 261,847.

Altogether there are 4,820,734 women in England and Wales engaged in "gainful occupations," to quote the official term. The greater part of these, 1,250,672, are domestic servants, the cotton industry providing the next highest number of women workers, namely, 372,824, while 322,029 are employed in the coal mines. In 1907, 117,967 were women.

It will probably surprise many people to learn that 3,186 women are employed in the coal mining industry, 2,963 in the building trade, 7,170 on the railways, and 7,284 in the engineering, machine making, ironfounding, and bottermaking trades. On the other hand, women laundry workers are rapidly being displaced by men and machinery, owing to the decline of the small hand laundries and private laundry work.

The census reveals some interesting facts about the curious occupations of women. It appears that there are three women ministers of religion, three grocers, one coachman, one coal heaver—a woman over sixty-five, one millwright, one slaughterer, forty-five electricians, 204 seamstresses, four swordmakers, two watchmakers, three shipwrights, five tramway makers, and nine sea pilots, while there is also one woman working as a plumber.

THE CHILD'S HEALTH

Diphtheria Should be Guarded Against—Watch For Throat Trouble

The chief thing to remember in dealing with diphtheria is that it is highly contagious. Diphtheria is caused by a specific germ which is propagated in the human body or its excretions. The poison may be communicated directly or indirectly from one person to another.

There are various ways in which it may be transmitted. It may originate in sputa, air, water, milk, food or clothing may be the medium.

As a rule diphtheria attacks the throat only. It may spread to the mouth and nasal passages.

The earlier symptoms include sore throat, headache, dry hot skin, feverishness, pain, tenderness and swelling at the angle of the jaw. Sometimes, added to this, there are excretions from the nose.

Owing to the fact that it is difficult to distinguish between a mild case of diphtheria and laryngitis, pharyngitis or a severe tonsillitis, it is important to have an early diagnosis and report of the disease. For the same reason it is very wise when your child complains of any of the symptoms mentioned to call in a physician. Early treatment, as well as early recognition of this disease, is all important.

The diphtheria patient should be kept in a room where there is only such furniture as is necessary for his comfort. He should not be allowed to handle books or toys. These which he handled prior to the time it was determined that he had the disease should be burned.

Only the persons in direct charge of the patient should be permitted in the room. Disinfectants ordered by the physician should be rigidly used.

One final word of warning—the poison of diphtheria may be carried long distances in articles which have been allowed to lay in a room where a patient has been.
