In beginning the introduction of the ertical system in Philadelphia, Supt. Broceeded with proper caution, fame is not confined to America, says: Fisoks proceeded with proper caution, and at first the system was optional. He consulted his 286 principals, and soon found that they perceived improvement as the result of the innovation. In one of his reports a few years ago, he said:

The result of this experiment, (the sole objection to the vertical system), has sen very satisfactory to the principals of the very satisfactory to the principal very satisfactory to the pr very satisfactory to the principals ony of these principals and teachers new system. Their opinion is that it It is Spreading Throughout Britain, Geris easier to teach, more easily learned by the pupil, is more legible than the oblique hand, and that the experiment has improved the penmanship in their schools. The only criticism that they make, and this is not universel is that it cannot be written as rapidly as the oblique system, though this is a question upon which authorities differ. I can myself bear testimony to the fact that the experiment, whatever may be our final conclusion as to the merits of the aystem, has greatly improved the penmanship of our schools. This is shown by the written exercises in language and other branches brough to my office; and was especially manifest in June examination papers of the last two years.

Is it Popular?

In order to obtain data for an intelligent judgment upon the continuation of our experiment, I wrote to the Superintendents of 150 of the largest cities in the country asking the following queetions:

1. Has vertical writing been introduced into your schools?

2. Has the experiment with vertical writing been and other branches brough to my office; and was especially manifest in June examination papers of the last two years.

adopted because of the recognized super-ior legibility and neatness of the vertical search of further evidence I also In search of further evidence I also wrote to 60 of the leading State normal schools of the country, asking the same questions that were put to the Superintendents. Of these, 41 replies have been received, and 40 of these 41 have introduced vertical writing. Of these 40 schools, 37 report that the experiment has been a successful, and one says that it has not been in use long enough to form a judgment. Of the 40 who have made the introduction, 37 recommend the system for primary grades, one made the introduction, 37 recommend the system for primary grades, one does not prefer it, and two have not made up their minds about it. Of these 40, also, 31 recommend it for grammar-grades, 3 are in doubt about it, 2 think a slightly sloping hand better for those grades, and 4 suggest that the pupil be left to his own individuality in penman-ship in those grades, or that all children of the upper grades should not be com-pelled to use the same hand. It will thus be seen that the opinion in favor of the pelled to use the same hand. It will thus be seen that the opinion in favor of the vertical system is, on the part of the normal schools practically unanimous. The expressions of the principals are often very strong and decided, as "very successful," "yes, in many ways," unusually so," "thoroughly." "yes, and most successful where the student seemed unship to write a largith hand in the present the student seemed unship to write a largith hand in the present the student seemed unship to write a largith hand in the present the student seemed unship to write a largith hand in the present the student seemed unship to write a largith hand in the present the student seemed unship to write a largith hand in the part of the student seemed unship to write a largith hand in the part of the vertical seemed unship to write a largith hand in the part of the vertical seemed unship to the seemed unship to the part of the vertical seemed unship to the part of the vertical seemed unship to the part of the vertical seemed unship the vertical seemed unship the part of the vertical seemed unship the vertical able to write a legible hand in the angular system."

The Only Objection Urged.

The Only Objection Urged,

The only objection that has been rused to the vertical system has been that it is a slower hand than the sloping hand. But opinion is by no means agreed. Indeed it appears to be entirely a question of whether the teaching of the vertical system is properly done. Any kind of writing executed with finger movement will be slow, and tiresome to the writer. Arm and hand movements should be cultivated, and a good foundation in form laid, and then the best will be got out of any system. And such a course of training will tell strongly in favor of the vertical system with its economy of lines and regularity of form. Indeed the tendency of all writers who write much and rapidly is toward the vertical.

Of 380 specimens of writing of telegraphers, who had been educated in the Spencerian system of writing, 302 were found to write a vertical hand; 8 wrote a backhand; 59 wrote within 10 to 15 degrees of vertical, and in only 11 was the Spencerian slant of 52 degrees preserved.

The tendency of the uncoached pupil is the previous that the previous the previous that the previous that the previous the previous that the previous that the previous that the previous the previous that the previous the previous that the previous the previous that the previous that the previous the previous that the previous that the previous the previous that the previous the previous the previous that the previous the previous the previous that the previous that the previous the pre

The vertical copy books first used in America were printed in England by Sampson Low & Co., for Prof. John Jackson. The vertical system suited John Bull. It was like the man, straight up and down. It was devoid of faneiful flourish; the letters were clear and plain; it fitted to arm movements and could be written rapidly, learned easily, and read with great ease. The bankers and business men favored it. It soon found its way into the Board schools. It found favor there, and ere long it was almost general. In many of the schools the vertical is the exclusive system of writing. RAILWAYS WAR IN DON VALLEY.

HONORED THE BANDMASTER.

Nearly forty years, he said, was a long time to look back.
"It was my aim," he said, "when I first took charge of the band to make it the best in Canada and I think I aave succeeded."

To do this it was necessary to have the support of the officers and it was most essential to have good musicians. In both he had been most fortunate. The officers had given every assistance and the band was composed of good men. Looking back over the long number of years of his connection with the Thirteenth he recollected many a member of the band who had covered himself with glory in the musical world and succeeded in other fields. After relating a number of incidents he again expressed his appreciation for the recognition of his srevices.

To you is due the credit of Hamilton's Thirteenth Band being the subject of admiration, not only locally, but abroad, and we feel that the people of Hamilton have been singularly fortunate in securing the citizenship of one who has personally contributed so long and frequently to their entertainment and delight, and who at the same time is the father of a family of musicians of high distinction and repute.

Your fellow citizens admire your sterling character and appreciate he advantages of your citizenship to the city, and in asking you to accept the accompanying salver and purse of gold we use language not at all too strong when we say that your friends, and all are your friends, earnestly trust that you may long be spared to lead the Thirteenth Band and to continue to furnish that highest class of musical entertainment which we have so long been accustomed to enjoy at your hands.
