

A ROMANTIC CASE.

A very interesting case came up in the Supreme Court today, before Judge Olt on Monday and Tuesday, the circumstances of which are such as may justly be called romantic without imputing any wrong motives to the parties concerned.

WOMEN IN THE LONDON TELEGRAPH OFFICE.

Eight hundred young women at work, all in one room, looking comfortable, most of them looking pretty, earning fair wages at easy work—work fit for women to do, and at which they can sit and rest, and not be weary, with a kitchen at hand and a hot dinner in the middle of the day, with leave of absence without stoppage of pay every year, with a doctor for sickness and a pension for old age—for the young women as years roll on will become old—only eight hours of work, never before 8 o'clock in the morning and never after 8 at night, with female superintendents, and the chance of rising to be superintendent open to each girl. This is a Government office, under Government surveillance, and all this has sprung into existence during the last eight years. The General Post office in St. Martin's Lane, near St. Paul's and there are now two great post offices at the same place, facing each other, the older one having been found altogether insufficient for the purpose required, although when it was first opened, about forty-five years ago, it was supposed to be almost large for any possible requirements which the country could have for such a building. Those who pass from Chancery into Newgate street, after the lamps have been lighted, may observe, on looking up, the whole floor of this new building is illuminated. It is here that the 800 young women are at work, and their business consists in the receipt and despatch of telegraph messages. After discovering that at least 800 women can keep a secret (secrecy is essential here) Mr. Trollope asked: "How many messages do you have during last year?" "I had known some of the civil service myself, and been aware that in dealing with large bodies of men, the exercise of discipline must have recourse to that last means of deterring that obedience and order are indispensable." "Dismissed?" "Yes, my friend, dismissed. It seems to me a long time ago. I'll get the books. The books were produced, and it appears that the unfortunate one named had been away at some time in 1873. From a body of public servants as large as a regiment, there had been no dismissals in four years.
