Three Persons Shot Dead.

TWO POLICEMEN AND A WOMAN.—FIRE AT AN INN.—CAPTURE IN A DRAIN.

Three people were shot dead yesterday afternoon at the little colliery village of Bedlington, Northumberland. A man-hunt followed, and John Amos, a man of about thirty-two years, is now in custody charged with the triple offence.

The victims were Sergeant Barton and Police Constable Musle, of the Northumberland Police, and Mrs. Sarah Grice, wife of an innkeeper. The circumstances are singular. There is a custom, it appears, by which a manager of a licensed house may be dismissed and a new tenant installed on the same day, and it was the exercise of this custom which is said to have led to yesterday's affray. Amos, who has travelled a good deal, having visited America on more than one occasion, has been for six weeks tenant of the Sun Inn, a recently rebuilt, fully licensed house at Bedlington. This is owned by Mr. J. Wood Irons, of Newcastle, who has a license in his own name. Mr. Irons yesterday gave Amos his notice, and introduced a new tenant, Richard Grice.

Amos disputed the validity of the notice and refused to go, so it is alleged, until a bond for £60 was returned to him, but the owner declined to give this up until there was a settlement of accounts. About four o'clock, Mr. Irons, Mr. Grice, and a friend of the latter were in the cellar taking stock. Amos was upstairs, and it appears that Constable Musle entered the house during this time and tried to exercise his influence to induce Amos to leave quietly. But Amos, it is alleged, after some words, produced an American Winchester repeating rifle, which he had apparently loaded previously, and fired. Musle was hit in the neck and fell. He died a few seconds later.

Amos then turned, it is said, and fired at Mrs. Grice, who was just descending to the cellar. She dropped down the ladder into the cellar. Police Sgt. Barton, who had been called by the neighbors when the shots were heard, then entered, and Amos fired at him twice, both bullets striking him in the chest. The sergeant fell and died instantly.

Smoking a Cigarette.

By this time a crowd had gathered outside, but Amos, instead of making off, is stated to have walked out in front, carrying his rifle and daring anyone to touch him. Meanwhile he lit and smoked a cigarette. Messengers went for the police, the headquarters of the district being only a short distance away, and Amos, as their approach grew imminent, retired into the house. He was seen by a neighbor to kiss his wife. Then he fled by the back way, still carrying his rifle, and by its means keeping the crowd from following him. By the time the police arrived he was lost sight of behind a hay stack.

Headed by Inspector Cullley, the police quickly followed the trail, having first obtained three shot guns. The haystack was surrounded, but this was found to be a blind trail, and then the path was followed straight on to Hartford Woods, lying less than half a mile away. More police, summoned by telephone and cyclists, had by this time arrived, and while the Bedlington contingent searched Hartford Woods, others made their way towards Bedlington, searching on the way.

"I'll Come Out!"

The search of the woods proved fruitless, and after more than two hours' work, in which a crowd of men and boys, numbering perhaps a hundred, assisted, a return was made towards Bedlington. As the haystack which had previously been searched was reached, Constable Smith noticed footmarks branching off towards a drain or culvert about two feet high. The police shouted down this but received no reply, so a shot gun was placed at the end and fired.

There was no reply to the first discharge, but after a second one a voice was heard crying, "I'll come out! I'll come out!" The police drew away and pointed their guns at the outlet, but Amos crept out without his rifle and held his hands up in token of surrender. He was arrested by Inspector Hutchinson and Constable Smith. The rifle was afterwards found in the drain. Four cartridges had been discharged, it is stated, and one "live" one still remained in the rifle. Amos was taken to the police station and there detained after slight injuries which he had sustained from pellets had been dressed by Dr. Hudson, who was summoned for the purpose.

Mr. Grice, the new tenant, whose wife was shot, has until now, it appears, been chauffeur with Mr. Leath of Seghill Hall. When his wife was shot, he says, he was in the cellar with his friend and Mr. Irons. They heard a shot upstairs and shouted to inquire what was the matter. His wife replied that Amos was shooting, and Mr. Grice then called out to her to bring the children—their own son and a little girl who had come with them—and get into the cellar. She had led the children in and was just starting to go down herself when she was shot, and fell without a word.

Amos has a wife and three sons, aged three, eleven, and twelve years. Mrs. Grice was 33. Constable Musle, aged 31, was married only eighteen months ago. Sergeant Barton leaves a widow and two children.

The bodies of the three victims were left in the Sun Inn for some hours until after Amos had been caught.—Daily Mail, April 16th, 1913.

Waiting.

It's weary work, when we old men wait, remote from the mad world's hum; we wait and watch by the garden gate, for steps that never come. So many wait for the vanished things that never again arrive for the gleam of eyes, for the whirl of wings, for the friends who are not alive. So many wait in the tumbled wreck of their early hopes. I ween! I'm waiting now for a little check from a monthly magazine. The check was earned in the long ago, when my heart was young and brave, but it doesn't come and I toddle slow adown to a misty grave. The post-man comes on his round, by heek, and over the gate I lean, and he brings me duns but he brings no check from that monthly magazine. My gray hair falls on my wrinkled neck, and my eyes have lost their sheen. I have watched so long for that promised check from an eastern magazine. It's weary work for the old men, who wait, as the shades descend, for joys that will never come again, for comrades and guest and friend. To wait and watch by the garden wall, for the things that are past and gone, till the sun goes down and the shadows fall, and the night is stealing on. It's weary work to remain on deck till your system is filled with spleen, and wait and wait for a needed check from a jim crow magazine.
