The Jaw.

By H. L. RANN.

The jaw is a restless annex to the human face which is suspended where it can be seen and heard with great ease. It is the home of the will, but also secretes moveable teeth and a d several thousand yards of back talk.

The jaw has two important functions, which keep it busy fourteen hours a day. One of these is to reduce the proud and austere breakfast with a sliding gear action, and the other is to deliver curtain lectures. If it were not for the jaw every home would be a hospital for indigestion and belated husbands would not have to crawl up the front stairs in their stocking feet and be interrupted in the midst of an eloquent lie by the accusing voice of the town clock.

There are two kinds of jaws—round and square. The round jaw is the prettier of the two, as it usually contains the high-priced ornament known as the dimple, but it is not so useful in a joint debate or an argument with the grocer, as it is liable to give in and be stung with green bananas and withered sweet corn. The best specimen of square jaw now worn in this country is that used by Woodrow Wilson, who inherited it in early youth and points it in the direction of congress every few days. This is highly exasperating to congress, which runs quite extensively to jaw itself and does not care for any competition.

A good deal has been written and sung about the feminine jaw, mainly by disgruntled husbands who are about as delightful a household pet as the hedgehog. This is a base libel on the fair sex, who seldom take an active part in the conversation unless forced into it. On the other hand, all that is necessary to trip a man's jaw faster than a water meter in a laundry is to give him two highballs and a headline about T. R.

The jaw is used considerably in prize-fighting, and if struck with sufficient feeling will produce a drowsy feeling on the part of the struckee. The most famous jawbone recorded in history is the one with which Samson slew a thousand men, but there are some on the Chautauqua circuit that are almost as deadly.

Practical Imagination.

BY RUTH CAMERON.

Imagination is not generally considered a practical quality. And yet it is there a real great many practical matters in which it is of inestimable value. Shopping, for instance. The other afternoon a neighbor of mine was bewailing like Flora McFlimsey that she had nothing to wear. Her particular complaint was that she had absolutely nothing suitable to put on afternoons in the house.

Now not a month ago, this woman told me that her husband had given her $100 for her summer wardrobe. And, as I had seen some of her purchases, I knew she had spent part of it, at least, for that purpose. I reminded her of this fact.

"I know it," she said. "I did have $100 and I spent almost every cent of it for clothes, and yet I don't seem to have anything to wear afternoons. That blue charmeuse is too delicate to wear around with the baby, and I don't like to put on my suit in the house because that spoils the look of the skirt and wears it out before the coat. That serge I bought at such a bargain is too heavy for this weather. So here I am, with my money spent and nothing but a shabby last year's dress to wear afternoons. I ought not to have bought that blue dress, but it was so becoming, and I knew I should enjoy having it for the bridge party. For that price I could have gotten a simple afternoon dress and a less expensive bridge gown. But it's too late now, and the worst of it is that I do this every year—go in and spend a lot of money and then find that I haven't half covered the ground. Isn't it dreadful?

Do you know what quality that lady lacks?

Imagination. Let me tell you how the Lady-Who-Always-Knows-Somehow has taught herself to avoid this predicament—a predicament into which almost every woman of limited means occasionally falls. "Before I go shopping for my season's wardrobe," says the Lady, "I sit down and try to picture just about where I'll be and what I'll be doing each day, so that I can see what I'll need the most. I picture myself from the time I get up in the morning until I go to bed at night. I think of all the things I'm likely to do, and the places I'm likely to go, and I make out a list of the clothes I want. Then I cut it down to the clothes I can't get along without, and then I buy them. Of course, I still make some mistakes, but I find that helps me a lot in getting what I need the most, and not loading up with superfluities."

The Lady, you see, has that invaluable quality, a practical imagination. Perhaps you already apply her method, consciously or unconsciously. If you don't, permit me to give it my highest recommendation.

Household Notes.

An omelet pan should be used only for omelet. Never scratch it in any way. If any pieces of egg have stuck to the pan put in a tiny piece of dripping and allow this to get hot over the fire. The pieces will then come off easily.

To remove mildew make a thick paste of salt and buttermilk. Cover the spot with it and lay it in the sun for a day, renewing the paste at the end of four hours. If the stains are obstinate, several applications may be necessary.

The brown spots which appear on old china may be removed. Bury the dish in the earth covering it completely. The darker spots will require more time in the earth than the light ones. This method will not harm the most delicate china.

Dusters can easily be made by soaking squares of old flannel in paraffine oil overnight and wringing them out lightly. They should be washed in lukewarm water. They will gather up all dust and leave a nice polish on the furniture and floors.

Hardwood floors should first be swept with a soft brush then wiped with a long-handled dust mop. If there are any spots on the floor rub them with a flannel cloth. If this does not remove them clean with a little turpentine on a cloth. If water is spilled on the floor, it should be wiped up at once. If any liquid spilled on a wax floor is allowed to dry, it will produce a stain which can only be removed by hard scrubbing.

If the yoke of a dress has become soiled try cleaning it in the following manner: Have a basin of warm water, a cake of pure white soap and a brush with medium stiff bristles. Spread the yoke carefully on a flat surface, placing a Turkish towel, folded several times, beneath it, to absorb the superfluous moisture. Apply the soap and water to the yoke, scrubbing it carefully with the brush until it appears clean. Then place a fresh towel beneath the lace and rinse several times with clear, cold water. Pull the lace into shape and allow it to dry.

Declines to be Brummel.

Heir to British Throne Goes in Fur Comfort in Clothing.

The Prince of Wales is yet too young to be "arbitrarily elegant," but the time may come. At present our fashionable youths are much perturbed because they do not find that the prince sets the seal of his approval on their taste in elegant attire. While they are especially punctilious in the observance of certain modes the prince makes a point, it might almost be said, of ignoring these customs. For example, he invariably wears his gloves buttoned and never leaves the ends open and tucked down over the wrist, as is the custom of the young "swell."

He wears a stand up turned down collar with a frock or morning coat simply because that collar is more comfortable than the plain stand up collar.

Several members in the royal household, it may be mentioned, have lately followed the young prince's example in this matter and have discarded the stand up collar altogether except in the evening, by general consent a stand up collar with small wings looks smarter in the evening than a turned down collar—and such a collar is always worn.

The taste of the prince in the matter of socks, however, delights the heart of the youth of fashion, for he frankly confesses to a taste for gaily patterned socks. These socks are made to order from designs that are submitted to the prince, who has two or three pairs made to go with each of his suits. The dress bills of the prince are naturally beginning to rise, but nevertheless, he does not throw money away on clothes. He generally orders half a dozen suits at a time, and does this at most three times a year. Though the prince is "fitted" at his tailor's when necessary, his tailors have an accurate model of his figure, and one fitting is the most that is necessary.

The heir apparent has a great liking for soft shirts and wears ordinary white shirts as seldom as possible. His favorite day attire is a knicker suit and soft shirt and collar, and directly he gets out of London he gets into such a suit as early as possible.

In the matter of walking sticks the prince bids fair to exceed his grandfather's famous collection in number and interest, but of the thirty walking sticks he possesses the prince rarely carries any but a large crooked gold mounted stick given him by the Kaiser when he came over to attend King Edward's funeral.

This particular stick at Oxford is known as the "Prince's Crook," a designation that when it reached the ears of the Princess Mary she at once gave to the stick.

Is It So?

"Just about the time you have the world at your feet you wake up."

"Some people run into debt, but others just jump."

"Give her what she wants when she wants it, and she'll want something else."

"When a woman builds a house she wants plenty of closets. Then she spends most of her time looking in them for burglars."
