Guelph Evening Mercury

SATURDAY EVENING, FEB. 1, 1873.

ADELAIDE.

For the Mercury.
Come out in the evening, all aglow
With the autumn moonlight's splendor.
Come out where the poppies grow,
Where the sorrowing waters, murmuring flow—
Where the vine-leaves twine,
And the sad stars shine
Like your dark eyes, softly tender
Come out from the night
Of the willow's shade,
Into the light
That the moon has made,
Beautiful, dreaming,
Adelaide.

Come out, and the stars will fade from view Jealous are they of your splendor.
The moon cannot rival the light you bring,
That dwells in your eyes of rare brown hue.
Where the moon-dust dies,
The sweetest sighs
Or melts into love-dreams tender
Come out from below
The willow's shade,
Into the glow
That the moon has made,
Beautiful, dreaming,
Adelaide.

OR—

THE TEMPTATION.

CHAPTER III.

THE MOVEMENTS OF THE GARROTTER.

"Stuff and nonsense," growled her misguided brother, "You've got the blues. Take a glass of brandy, as I do when I get down in the dumps. You're a good girl though, Nell. Never saw any one like you—oh yes, by Jove, I did though, and this very night too." Dick's countenance darkened as he spoke. "I saw a young girl to-night most uncommon like you, Nell. I could almost have sworn at first it was yourself, so near did she come to your size, complexion, and looks. But, good-lie, old lass, for I must be going. You ain't sorry to see me go, I dare say," he added, with a low laugh.

"No, Richard I must tell you plainly

I am not sorry to see you go, and I do not want to see you again while you continue on your present evil course. For heaven's sake be cautious how you go out, for if you are seen I am lost."

The window was raised again, and he got noiselessly out upon the roof of the outhouse, Ellen's heart beating with terror as she watched his descent, lest he should be heard or observed by any of the other servants. He reached the ground in safety and unobserved, and remained gazing from the window till she saw him pass through the door into the lane. She drew a long sigh of relief, deeming that the danger was escaped, when a slight rustle behind caused her to turn round, and, to her indescribable consternation, she beheld her mistress standing in the room.

Ellen turned pale as death, uttered a low scream, and clasping her hands, sank helplessly into a chair.

"Nay, Ellen," said Mrs. Langton, in a calm and not an unkind tone, "do not fear that any evil consequence will follow from what has just taken place. Fortunately for you, I have heard all the conversation. I was in the room waiting to speak to you when the tap came to the window, and a man's voice called your name. Suspecting it to be a lover, whose visit you were receiving clandestinely, I
