DOES KING EDWARD FEAR

Correspondent Says Prince of Wales Does Not Possess Diplomacy That May Hold the Throne Secure. New York, April 4.—The Times today publishes a London cable under a flare head, "Edward Fears for the Throne," and saying: "Strange and almost incredible as the statement may seem, I am able to declare that the king is haunted by the fear that he may be the last king of England to sit securely upon the throne. In the course of time when the present Prince of Wales succeeds him, there are in the opinion of his father, likely to be events and complications that may undermine the British monarchy."

archy. King Edward has a proper sense of his own tact and ability to preserve with dignity the attitude of a constitutional sovereign, and, although it is well-known among his immediate entourage that his political sympathies are with the Radicals, he has never departed by a hair's breadth from the strict impartiality by which, as a constitutional monarch, set above parties, he has been guided to all his public acts.

"This correct attitude will in a measure safeguard the crown in the event of its being dragged into the prospective fight between the English political parties. Although each side is even now seeking to create the impression that the king will stand with it in the future battle, neither can point to any public act of the king to justify such an assertion. Nor can either point to what might be termed an indiscretion on the part of King Edward."

"In the case of the Prince of Wales, the boot is very much on the other leg. He is strongly Tory, and makes no concealment of the fact, notwithstanding his father's frequent outpourings. There are countless instances of the prince expressing in mixed political circles views which could be pleasing only to one section of his hearers."

"London at the present moment is buzzing with a story of an incident which occurred a couple of Saturdays ago, when the prince attended a university football match at the Queen's Club. During an interval in the game he was noticed to be talking somewhat emphatically and excitedly on some subject. What the subject was speedily became apparent, for the prince, in the heat of discussion, raised his voice to such a pitch that it was heard by scores of persons in the neighborhood. He was roundly denounced by David Lloyd-George and his gutter budget."
