

it raised this country from its present condition, to one of great prosperity and wealth.

To hasten the advent of such a condition, the Government should, to the utmost, promote and diffuse knowledge; and forward facilities of communication between different parts of the country; it need not concern itself with canal or railroad routes, for merely through traffic or travel's sake, for if these undertakings will pay, they may safely be left to private enterprise, and if they will not, Government should not for the convenience of people beyond our borders enter into such profitless undertakings.

No apprehension need be entertained respecting the ability of Government to put treasury notes into circulation. When prepared to issue them, let an act be passed rendering null and void all notes of the banks not presented for payment within three or six months; making the treasury notes the only legal tender; enabling banks to redeem their liabilities with them; and making it criminal to pledge the same money more than once. Then let Government issue its notes, undertaking to receive them and them only in payment of all dues to itself, to any one on receiving value, or to any one on giving security for the amount advanced, and willing to pay interest for the same.

&
vice
of t
the
to t
tell
Now
agre
force
yond
of th
than
hands
or ma
it wou
rob th

It i
indust
to ena
therefo
possess
Govern
broad
man to
has giv
advanta
his neig
ducts o
who wil
sell to w
of this may be cessities
of the co
them to