THE MESSAGE OF "THE OLD ORCHARD." 321

reason why you ought not to marry. If you do you shall have my blessing. Yes, I would love to have Kate with me again."

Within a month Arthur was with Kate again. In the meantime she had got her business almost all settled, so that there was little need for delay. "I think we may return by the next steamer," she said to Arthur, about ten days after his arrival. "I am so glad you came for me."

"I also am glad that I came for you, Kate," replied Arthur. "But I want you to take a much longer journey with me. I want you to go with me all through life. I love you, Kate, and I have some reason to hope you may reciprocate my love. I have told mother. She knows it all."

"Arthur, I have never forgotten Dr. Sam's advice to me, 'Always be true,'" answered Kate. "I think I do not violate it in telling you that I love you. My heart does not condemn me. I will go with you to our old home, and I will go with you all through life, if you think me worthy, and I shall try always to be true."

In a large house, erected as a refuge for homeless and indigent creatures, for those fallen through drink or by lust, and for those who had never been capable of caring for themselves—in this house a room was assigned to a lonely woman who made application for shelter. All her belongings were carried in a trunk, which was deposited in her room. She lived only about three months after entering this large rely

ked

ker, vho I

you tell

Hc me ver. Dr. œ's nid on-

ge at ut

to :e.

is s.

10